The Unilingual Inscriptions K. 138 and K. 3232, translated.
—By J. Dyneley Prince, Ph.D., Professor in New York University, New York, N. Y.

Happily for the Assyriological world, the long discussion as to the existence of a non-Semitic "Sumerian" language is rapidly drawing to a close. Indeed, the main question may be considered as practically settled. Even Friedrich Delitzsch, who has been until recently perhaps the most authoritative of the Anti-Sumerists, has at last changed his views and now holds that the Sumerian was really a language and was not merely, as the Anti-Sumerists thought, an ideographic system of writing the Semitic Assyro-Babylonian. It may be stated that the majority of Assyriologists are now convinced of the two following main facts: first, that the cuneiform system of writing originated with a non-Semitic people; and second, that the language of this non-Semitic race, of which we have so many specimens, most of which appear in connection with an interlinear Assyrian translation, should be known as Sumerian. The reasons formerly advanced for the name Akkadian are now very generally regarded as unsatisfactory. A history and elucidation of the entire question is given by Weissbach in his short but comprehensive work Die sumerische Frage.

Of course, Assyriology is really only at the threshold of Sumerian investigation, as there are many important problems

1 Published in Haupt's Akkadische und sumerische Keilschrifttexte, pp. 104-106.
2 See his Hdb. throughout, and his Assyr. Gr., 1889, § 35, where he gives a long excursion against the theories of the Sumerists.

still to be solved. Of these the most weighty are undoubtedly: first, as to the phonology, grammatical structure and syntax of the language; secondly, as to its vocabulary; and thirdly and finally, as to its possible similarity to existing agglutinating speech-families. Dr. Christopher Johnston in the JAOS., xv. pp. 317–322, has stated with admirable clearness the lines along which Sumerian research should proceed.

The following three inscriptions belonging to the library of Assurbanipal are entirely unilingual, i.e. only in the Sumerian without the customary Assyrian interlinear translation. Nrs. 1 and 2 have never been translated before. They all relate to the ancient Semitic idea that disease (and incidentally sin, of which the Assyro-Babylonian religion had a deep consciousness) may be removed by being mysteriously communicated to animals of the goat or deer species, which are then formally driven away with their load of guilt into the wilderness. In a paper on the Scapegoat read before the A.O.S. in Baltimore, 1897, but not published in the Journal, Dr. Christopher Johnston discussed the translation of Nr. 3. A popular summary of this paper appeared in the American Antiquarian, xx. pp. 140–3, where the author merely gives the translation of the inscription without any comments on the text, comparing, however, the Assyrian ritual of the scapegoat with the similar Hebrew custom.

In the Priestly Code of the Pentateuch, in Lev. xvi., we read that, on the Day of Atonement, the high priest (Aaron) was commanded to come to the sanctuary, where, after purifying himself with water, he was to put on the holy vestments. Two he-goats were then chosen for a sin offering, as well as a bullock for a sin offering and a ram for a burnt offering. The two goats were to be solemnly placed before JHVH at the door of the tabernacle. Lots were then cast upon the goats, one of which was destined for JHVH and the other to be a scapegoat for the demon Azazel.

2 Mention is made of it in JAOS, xviii. p. 388, Nr. 24.

The goat upon which the lot for Jhvh fell was accordingly presented and slain as a sin offering, together with the bullock and the ram. The high priest then laid his hands upon the head of the live scapegoat, confessing over it all the sins of Israel, which were thus thought to be placed upon the animal. A man especially appointed for the purpose led the goat into the wilderness, where it was allowed to go free "to Azazel." We should note that both the high priest and the person who led the animal away must purify themselves by washing after the ceremony.

Such, briefly, was the Hebrew custom with the goat. It is interesting in this connection, however, to note that in cases of cleansing from leprosy a similar practice was followed with birds. If the leprous spots had disappeared from the patient, the priest took two birds, one of which was killed and its blood allowed to flow into a vessel over running water. The blood of the dead bird was then sprinkled over the patient. The living bird, after being dipped in the blood and thus infected with the curse, was permitted to fly away "into the open field" (cf. Lev. xiv. 9, 53).

Of the following inscriptions, Nrs. 2 and 3 show an interesting parallel with these Hebrew rites. In Nr. 2, the god Marduk is enjoined by his father Ea to bring "the gazelle which alleviates pain" before the patient, who in all three inscriptions is mentioned as "the king," and to place upon his head the head of the animal. The gazelle, having thus got the disease, which was of course caused by demons, was driven away from the king, who was straightway conjured to become clean. In Nr. 3, the king, after coming forth from the house of purification, shoots at the gazelle, which is placed before the altar of the sun-god, with a bow made by pure hands, but does not kill it. All the ailments from which the king had suffered "go forth" into the gazelle "like (the arrow of) the bow." The scapegoat is then let loose in the field and the curse takes up its abode with it. In Nr. 1, also, we see a variation of the same idea. Here, in lines 2–9, the wild horned gazelles evidently typify demons like the Hebrew sefirim. They are enjoined not to approach the 1 The disappearance of leprous spots from the skin in the early stages of the disease is universal. The initial hyperaemia tends to subside and remain quiescent until a further exacerbation of the leprous fever is at hand, when the spots reappear with increased force. Any hope that the disease had left the system which was based on this phenomenon was therefore a vain one.

king, and are ordered by Marduk to depart to the boundaries of the great deep. After this general divine command to the unclean gazelle-demons to depart, the priest proceeds to purify the king (lines 9–15). Then comes the injunction "drive away that horned gazelle," which would imply the scapegoat ceremony as in Nrs. 2 and 3, although it is not stated here that the gazelle was actually placed in contact with the patient. With the departure of the gazelle, which must go into the field to a clean place (i.e. unclean place),¹ it is prayed that all evil disease may disappear from the king.

The similarity between these Assyrian ceremonies and the Hebrew rites is too striking to require much comment. In both instances, we have the sin or disease communicated to the goat or deer-like animal which is let loose in the waste places to roam as a thing accursed. Furthermore, in Nr. 2 the disease is placed upon the head of the animal, as in the Hebrew record, and in both accounts the element of purification is essentially the same. There can be no doubt that animals of the goat family were recognized as types of the demons of the waste who were endowed with baleful influence against man, and who were in fact regarded as the chief cause of disease. In this connection should be compared Isa. xiii. 21; xxxiv. 14. In 2 Chr. xi. 15 and Lev. xvii. 7, the se'irim are mentioned as receiving worship.

So far as I am aware, the inscriptions here translated are the only ones which relate directly to the Assyrian ceremony of the scapegoat, although the idea of removing sin or disease is common in the cuneiform psalm-literature. We should compare here the characteristic examples cited by Johnston, Amer. Antiq., xx. pp. 141–2, as well as the refrain given by Tällqvist, Finsk Tidskrift, March, 1892, p. 208: "Many are my sins and I am broken in all things. May the curse depart; may it go to the desert."

It is highly probable, as Professor Haupt has pointed out in his paper on the Origin of the Pentateuch, PAOS. March, 1894, pp. cii–ciii., that the entire Priestly Code was influenced by Babylonian institutions. In this instance, it would appear, we have the Babylonian prototype of the Hebrew scapegoat.

¹ Haupt has shown that this euphemism is found, for example, IV. R. 8, 48; 14, Nr. 2, Rev. 2; cf. Lev. vi. 11: "he shall carry forth the ashes without the camp unto a clean place."
It may be noted here that superstitions essentially the same in character as the idea of the scapegoat are still in existence among the Irish Celts. I have personally been gravely told that infectious diseases, especially measles and mumps, may be checked soon after their inception, by permitting the patient to fondle some small animal, such as a puppy or kitten, which is believed to contract the disease and remove it from the human sufferer. The animal is usually taken out and killed. Another similar practice sometimes observed among the same people is to make the patient duck three times under an ass, which is then thought to carry the disease away.

In Nrs. 1 and 3 of the following inscriptions, I have given so far as possible the Sumerian transliteration and an English translation. In Nr. 2, however, I have ventured to add, for the sake of greater clearness, an Assyrian translation of my own.

Commentary.

2. Only the last part of this line is legible. For šeš-duggu= šarat zumrišu, cf. V.R. 50, 51a. The same ideogram šeš-duggu, if preceded by su=mašku ‘skin’ as a determinative, may be read šappartu ‘skin of a goat’; cf. Br. 241, and see V.R. 50, 48b. In this case, however, as the preceding character is probably not su (see text), I prefer to read the phrase as referring to the unhealthy condition of the king, as in V.R. 50, 57a, where we read: su rubišu limnu šarat zumrišu (šeš-duggu) ušizu ‘he, the hair of whose body an evil lurker (demon) causes to stand up,’ i.e. with disease or terror. Ušizu is probably not to be rendered ‘takes away,’ with Delitzsch, Hdbb. s. v. nazāzu, p. 456.

The sign bir (see Br. 2024 ff.) is evidently a compound of *MAŠ-Bar. (Br. 1720)=zištu (from ZIP;) ‘suborder,’ Sc. 1a, 11, DUG-SAR. = kiššatu ‘multitude’ (Br. 8221). The original meaning of the sign is probably ‘abound, be superabundant’ cf. latā, Hdbb. s. v., and see also Delitzsch, Die Entstehung d. ältesten Schriftsystems, p. 160). Assyrian urišu is probably the proper translation of bir in these inscriptions, as the context clearly demands a distinct species of horned animal (cf. Nr. 2, lines 37–38), and not a general expression denoting wild cervidae.

Urišu is the only specific term which bir represents. It was evidently an animal with long horns, as may be seen from IV.R. 26, 20/21: Bir ša sag el-lu ‘a lofty headed urišu’; cf. Ps. xcii.
11. The 乌鲁 （oryx leucoryx） which has horns more than three feet long (see plate in Wellhausen's Psalms, SBOT, p. 173). The Assyrian word may be cognate with Hebrew וַיְרָע 'violent.'

5. Dim-ma=tarba 'offspring' (see Hdb. p. 610, and Br. 1167).

6. GIŠ.PA. can mean only sceptre. Nam-ba-te-ga-ne=a irtâni (from irtâ), IV.R. 5, 72c.

7. This is an extremely difficult line. That urud means vessel, not necessarily of copper—urud=ērā in the later Assyrian (cf. Sb. 114)—has been shown by Delitzsch, Schriftsystem, p. 186 ff. (cf. also Zb. p. 6, n. 2). I read im-maš as a possible verbal formation=ša ēlil; cf. MAŠ.ēlilu, Sc. 3 (see Br. 1750, and cf. MAŠ.MAŠ.ētēlulu, Sc. 1b, 15, and utebubu, Br. 1854). For nu-tag-tag-e-ne, cf. tag=lapātu, Br. 3797.

Nam-ku may be, as I render, for nam=šimtu 'fate' + the postposition -ku (šīt), i.e. ana šimti construed with tar=šāmu, Br. 381; cf. IV.R. 9, 34a: munib-tar-en=ša šinti šāmu, and IV.R. 23, 31a; nam-tar-tar-ra=mušim šināti. On the other hand, nam-ku is ideogram for rubātu 'greatness' (Br. 2217), i.e. the (king's) greatness is established (?)'. The prefix munanin- is not found elsewhere, but cf. munanib-gi=ippalšu in a probably passive sense (Br. 6308).

8. 锭 unpl. Asaru. For this reading of Šilig-ri=Marduk, cf. II. R. 55, 68c, and Br. 924. See also below on Nr. 2, 31.

The form na-ba-šī-in-de is without parallel. I conclude that na-ba-šī-in- is a prefix combination, although na-ba never occurs. For na-alone as the simple prefix of the third pers. cf., however, Br. 6331. Ba-šīn, i.e. ba + šīn, the infixed reflexive, similar in force to the Turkish -in-, in see-in-mek 'to love oneself,' occurs, for example, Br. 1072 in bašin-tu=eramma 'he entered,' sešil. šibī; ethical dative. The character de may mean abātu and xalātu (Br. 6721; 6728). For its primary signification simu= nappazu, see Delitzsch, Schriftsystem, p. 81. A discussion of this sign will be found ZA. i. p. 256. When combined with ka 'word, mouth,' it must be translated by šapāku, tabāku 'pour out, heap up,' Br. 6732-3, i.e. 'pour out words'; see below on Nr. 2, 34. That it cannot mean 'speak' in our passage is clear from the absence of ka, without which de never appears in this sense.
9. GIŚ.GHAR. = upurtu, Br. 8545; cf. also HT. 105, 44. Upurtu, from eṣēru (𒉊𒁉), denotes any circumscribed place where an absolute ruler has sole sway. See below on Nr. 2, 44. Eš=ab, Sb. 189, + magḫ ‘the great dwelling’ (cf. eš=bītum, Br. 3817), i.e. the abyss of the ocean. Cf. ama-ēš-magḫ, a secondary name of Damkina; ‘mother of the abyss’; Zb. 49, p. 14, and II.R. 58, 45d; and see also line 34 of this inscription.

For si-di=ēšēru ‘hurl oneself,’ cf. N.E. 63, 46: ša utukku limu 𒀀daemon iššu iššu ‘he upon whom the evil demon has hurled himself,’ and for the imperative in Sumerian ending in 𒊏ne, cf. Br. 4401.

11. Num-me=abkallu, HT. 78, 67; Sfig. 55, 5; KAT. p. 78; i.e. ‘he who decides,’ as abkal ilâni, Anp. i. 5. It was probably a priestly office.

K.A.M.Ž.GAL from ka=pū ‘mouth’ (Br. 538), + mu=šiptu (Br. 781) ‘incantation,’ + gāl (IK.)=pūtā ‘open’ (Br. 2248). Translate: ‘he who opens the mouth of incantation,’ i.e. ‘enchanter.’

A (ID) ba-da-an-aka. For the prefix ba-dan, of Br. p. 531. The combination a (ID) + aka (RAM) is given Br. 4750, where ID.RAM.GA=tērtu ‘law,’ for which word in Assyrian, see EIH. iv. 30. We find also L.U.ID.RAM.GA=ārtu ‘decrees,’ and RAM=āru, Br. 4751; cf. tērtu i-ru-u ‘issue a decree,’ V.R. 20, 24b. A (ID) ba-da-an-aka, then, would mean ‘he issues the decree.’ A similar kind of expression is ka mu-nan-du ‘he pours forth words’ (see note on line 8).

12. Gin-na; see below on Nr. 2, 35.

13. A-šu-nag-a=risnu, II.R. 48, 34c; cf. K. 4386, c. i. 44 ‘pouring out water,’ from 𒉊špreinkle’ (?). Nu-nag also means ramiku, II.R. 48, 33e; rinku, V.R. 51, 48b. For this expression ‘house of purification,’ which probably refers to a special temple used for this purpose, cf. HT. 106, 16.

The ideogram GI means primarily gānā ‘reed,’ and also biblu ‘produce,’ Br. 2387 and 2392 (see Sfig. p. 49). The exact meaning of the line is not clear, but it must refer to some detail of the ceremony of purification. For ŠEŠ.GAL, lit. ‘big brother’=úru-gal, cf. Br. 6452. This word also denotes a priestly office, perhaps subordinate to the abkallu.

*Dū-du-a-bi ‘when he sets up.’ Dū is banā, Br. 5248, šakānu, 5269, or ritū, 5265. The 3 p. suffix -bi probably indicates the construction ina šakānišu, although the -*ta=*ina is wanting here; cf. line 10, ina alākišu, where -te appears; but see HT. p. 105, 1: gin-a-anā 'when he goes.'

14. Aqubba=agubbā 'pure water,' Br. 11418. Gibilla 'fire,' Br. 2473; but for the rendering ti₇paru 'torch,' see ZK. ii. p. 52. The god of fire (dinir BIL.GI=Gibil) is praised in HT. 79, 10. Na-ga=alālu, ēlu and tē₇lītlu, i. e. 'be pure, pure' and 'purification,' Br. 1600–1602; cf. RI=alālu, Br. 2556.

15. The expression 'son of his god' (line 20, Nr. 2, 39 et passim) simply means pious person. The king here is of course identical with the patient of line 10. U-me-ni-e. For the imperative prefix umeni, cf. Br. p. 546, and see Nr. 2, 38.

16. The suffix -bi is often used in the sense of the demonstrative pronoun šāatu; cf. ga-bi-gim=kima šī₇bi šāatu 'like that milk,' IV.R. 16, 44b. In IV.R. 5, 52a, -bi=šāatu.

U-me-te-gur-gur. The imperative prefix umete- if the -te is indeed a part of the prefix, is not found elsewhere. My reason for regarding -te as a formative element is that gur alone is used for dā₇paru, Br. 3361. We find -te, however, in u-mu-un-te-gur-gur=dupīrma, IV.R. 27, 54, 57b, and HT. 105, 39. Brunnow unnecessarily gives te-gur as a variant of gur, 7719. Te is probably a variant of the locative *ta=ʿ thence,' here. The exact meaning of dā₇paru is not quite clear, but the Sumerian gur means primarily tā₇ru 'turn,' Br. 3367, so that u-me-te-gur-gur=dupīrma may be rendered 'turn away,' i. e. 'drive out,' used of disease as represented by the scapegoat. Delitzsch, Hexb, p. 226, cites zi₇ti dippiri 'drive away my sin,' K. 4931, rev. 7, 8, and tiddippir namtar 'may the evil fate be driven out,' K. 155, rev. It is not probable that nag is identical with nagal, seen, for example, in d₇paru, Zb. 46–7. The stem nag may be connected with Heb. nag in the sense 'drive back,' which occurs, for example, in Ps. cxxvii. 5; nag א-נהל א-נהל בנהר, 'they shall drive back the enemies in the gate'; cf. nag, back part of the sanctuary (Lagarde, Arm. Stud., § 541).

17. The atug might also be a favourable influence; see line 27. A.LAL=alā, Br. 11638. Atā was the heavenly bull created by Anu to avenge his daughter Ištar. According to the Nimrod Epic, it was killed by Gilgamesh and Eabani. Its secondary meaning, as seen here, is an evil demon with power to afflict man with disease.
Gekim=škimmu, Br. 11307. Note the difference between this sign and utug, Br. 11311. The škimmu was the restless wandering ghost.

TELAL=gallâ, Br. 7732, was an evil demon similar to the alâ. With this whole line, cf. IV.R. 16, 16a; Lu utukku limnu, lu alâ limnu, lu škimmu limnu, lu gallâ limnu.

18. Nin-ak-a=aršâš, Br. 12023; also HT. 106, 19 ‘spittle’ (so Muss–Arnolt in his Assyri. Dict. s. v.; cf. Jensen, ZK. ii. 33, and rem. 3). The word may be cognate with Syr. עַלְמִי. It is used in connection with ruštu in HT. 86:7, 60; aršâš ruštu ša ša ina pi limniš nadat, ‘spittle and breath fouly thrown from the mouth.’

Nin-ghul-gim-ma, lit. ‘whatever causes evil to exist,’ hence ‘disease,’ See HT. 106, 19.

A-ba-da-an-ur-ri-eš. Although abadan- does not occur elsewhere as a prefix, we find abadab-, Br. 7556, and, of course, badan-; see line 11. Ur=arâru, usually ur-ur, Br. 11888. The primitive meaning of ur is perhaps ‘to bind’; cf. xamâmû, Br. 11890, Sb. 271 and Zb. p. 81; also epêdu, Br. 11889; hence arâru ‘to bind with a curse.’

19. Ki-ri-a-šu. Ki=ašru place, Br. 9827; ri=alâlu ‘be clean,’ Br. 2556; a is the vowel of prolongation, and -ši (-ku) is the postposition ana, ina. For -ku(šu)=ina, cf. Br. 10563. This is emphemistic for ‘unclean place’ (see above).

Gha-ba-an-lagh-qi-eš. For the prefix ghaban-, cf. Br. p. 548. Lagh=nažâzu, Br. 4939. See also below on line 20. Note that lag also means alâku ‘go,’ Br. 4935.

20. AN.SES.KI=nâmû, Br. 6453, i. e. Šin, ‘the moon’; see IV.R. i. 29b. AN.TU.=babbar=Šamaš ‘the sun,’ Br. 7795. For -bi in the sense of the copula ‘and,’ cf. Br. 5131.

Igi-ni-šu=ana pânišu, IV.R. 2, 27b; a-ga-ni-šu=ana arkišu, Br. 11524/5.

Ghe-en-da-lagh-lagh-qi-eš. For the precative prefix ghendu-, cf. Br. p. 539, and for lagh-lagh=nažâzu, see above on line 19. The correct rendering here is probably kânu (Br. 4937); see HT. p. 92/3, 12. The suffix -gi indicating the vowel of prolongation shows that lagh must have been pronounced lugh.

suffixed -da in this form is very interesting. Parallel cases are found Br. 7088; baran-te-ga-da=lâ tedixxi; also namba-te-ga-da =â itxâni, from which we may perhaps infer that -da is a locative element incorporated with the verb-form, supplementing the force in this phrase of the postposition -sâ=inâ ‘in.’ Cf. also su-nilta gha-ba-an-tar-ru-da, Nr. 3, 21, ‘may it go out of his body.’ Other instances of incorporated -da are found, Br. 4211, gi-ib-bi-da =ixalbidum; 1814, šu-bar-ri-da=ussâru. In other languages of the agglutinative type such incorporation is well known. In the agglutinative and polysynthetic American tongues, precisely the same phenomenon occurs in such expressions as the Abenaki (Algonkian dialect): Otawa n-oji-n’mil’gon ‘from Ottawa it was given to me.’ In this form n’=-‘to me’; oji- is the encapsulated prepositional element ‘from’; mil’=‘give,’ and -gon=third person ‘he-she.’

22. MUKAG.A=t(u) (mu)=Assyr. tâ ‘incantation,’ Br. 783. For Ea=En-ki-ga, see Br. 2906, and for the gen. of this word with -kit, see IV.R. 1, 36b.

23. Tutu + nam-šub seems to mean ‘incantation’; cf. IV.R. 21, 47b; tu-tu nam-šub ba-an-se=iššuma šiptu ‘he casts it out, i.e. the incantation.’ Abzu-a (ZU.AB.a) ‘unto the deep.’ Note that -a=ana, Br. 11364; a=ina, 11365. Se=nadd, Br. 4417.

24. E-nun-na-kit ‘of the great house,’ i.e. ‘of the abyss’ (see above line 9), where Ea resides; cf. HT. 76, 11/12; ana Ea ina apû ‘unto Ea in the deep.’

Ghe-im-ma-an-gaba-gaba. For ghe-im-man, see Br. p. 540. The infixed -man- here is probably identical with -nib-, -šin-, i.e. infixed reflexive. Gaba=putâru, Br. 4488, and see Sb. 345. A similar idiom relating to loosening a curse is found in the expression: lipatûru mamitsu-nu ‘may they lessen the curse’; Ḫdwb. p. 522.

25. This line was left unfinished by the scribe. It should probably be filled out from line 17.

26. Bara-šu=ina axâtî; cf. IV.R. 2, 24a (Br. 1730). The verb here should probably be ghe-im-ta-gub=izziz, as in Nr. 2, 44. For this whole line, cf. HT. 93, 10; bar-ta-bi-šu gha-ba-ra-an-gub-bal=ina axâti lizziz. Note here the encapsulated locative -ta-which, like -da in line 21 above, is complementary to šu.

27. With this line should be compared the identical passage HT. 93:2, 11; Utug šig-ya lamma (AN.KAL.) šig-ga=šedu dumqi limasi dumqi. Utug=šedu only in these passages.
Śedu and lamassu (also lamaššu) indicate varieties of the bull-god which was represented by colossi at the entrances of temples and palaces. Śedu and lamassu were always protectors when mentioned together (Hitt. p. 381). The śedu when alone was a destroying storm-god. The usual ideogram for śedu is alad; cf. the unilingual line HT. 88, 40; Alad AN.KAL. nin šig-qa= śedu lamassu damqi (the Assyrian here is mine). Note that AN. KAL. (pron. lamma)=lamassu occurs Sb. 176.

Nam-lugal-la-kalam-na-kit. Kalam (kalama)=matu, Br. 5914.

28. This line is precisely identical with HT. 92. 12.

Commentary.

30. Bir-ghul-dub-ba. For bir, see above on Nr. 1, 3. That ghul denotes the abstract noun limutta as well as the adj. limnu is clear from Br. 9503; cf. IV.R. 28, 7a; ghul gim-ma=šeš limuttu, *Dub-ba=pašdu, Br. 7030.

31. El-bi or elābi with vowel of prolongation, for el + bi, is adverbial here, elliš; cf. II.R. 47, 55c, magha-bi=mašiš ; IV.R.
    5, 20b, pa(sig)-pa(sig)-ga-bi=šašummiš ; and for further examples of the adverbial use of the suffix -bi, cf. Br. 5139. That the ending -eš has also a purely adverbial force is seen from bur.
    ri-eš=azašiš, IV.R. 17, 38a; cf. also dug-gi-eš=tābiš, HT. 105, 8b
    For Ćug (id. KA) -ga=qibā, cf. Br. 531, and see especially IV.
    R. 41 (48), 22a, dug-ga=iqabbi (in var. K. 8018).

32. Nin-a-gha-kud-du is called ·‘lady of the shining water,’ IV.R. 28, Nr. 3, 58; ninagubba. In IV.R. 15, 39b she is especially invoked to protect and purify the sick; cf. II.R. 58, 48, where we read: 'may she utter the magic spell of Eridu with her pure mouth.' She is not infrequently associated with incantations (see Hommel, Sem. i. p. 383).

The reduplication tu-tu is probably plural (cf. HT, p. 140); da = the prep. ina, and -na is the suffix of the third person. It is possible, however, that -da represents the prolongation of tu = tud (?).

33. . . . . gi-bi may be for dug-gi-bi=tabiš, cf. HT. p. 105, 8 B, dug-gi-es 'graciously.'

33. Munibgar. For mun nib=ifteal and iftaneal, cf. Br. 3463 and 11897. A prefix and infix are frequently used to express the infixed verb form in Assyrian. For iltukan, see ba-nin-gar, IV.R. 8, 22b; 26, 8b; 7, la, 19a.

34. Ku nu-nun-de-e=išessi from išat also HT. p. 70, 5/6. The infix -nan here has the force of a dative, expressed in the Assyrian ana mārišu. See above, note on Nr. 1, 8.

35. For this line, cf. HT. p. 77, 27.

36. Lu-nam-ermu-na=aibu 'foe, enemy,' II.R. 24, Nr. 2 Obv.; K. 133, Obv. 7, 8; IV.R. 21, Nr. 1 B, Rev. 17 (see also Br. 4604). Owing to the verb-forms in lines 42-3 the noun is probably to be construed as a plural here, i.e. ābu 'enemies.' Lu = amētu 'man, person' and erim-ner=raggu 'evil, hostile'; Br. 4607.

In-dib-ba-a-an. Dibba=ṣabatu 'seize,' Br. 10694, and cf. Nr. 3, 3. The combination of a prefix (in this case in-) with the suffix a-an is used to denote the past relation, also Br. 7977; ba-an-pi-e-lu-la-a-an=ulta; mu-un-gam-a-an=kansaku, Br. 7322, etc. For the force of a-an in general, see Br. p. 561 B.

38. U-me-ni-gar-gar=inkunna, K. 246, c. ii. 53; K. 1284, 39. For umeni, imperative prefix, cf. Br. p. 546. This line is explained by IV.R. 26, 24, 8b; sag ṣer tā-ba-ān-se=qaggad urīši ana qaggad anēti ittdinni 'the head of the urīšu is placed in contact with the head of the man,' i.e. to receive the disease. Exactly the reverse of this idea is seen in HT. 91, 65 ff.: marušu arišāša ṣabātī qaggadsunu ana qagaddišu ...a iškuna; a itxū 'the evil sickness and (evil) saliva, may they not place their head against his head. May they not approach him.' Also in HT. 88, 40-1, we read: Alad AN.KAL. (lamma) nin šig-ya sagga-na a-ba-ni-in-gub=šedu lamassu dumnī ina rešīšu lizziz 'may the protecting bull-gods (see above on Nr. 1, 27) who are favourable stand at his head.' It is clear from these inscriptions that the head was regarded as the seat of disease; cf. also in this connection the custom of laying the kurāmatu 'magic food' (?) on the patient's head, possibly with the double idea that it should act as a fomentation and as a charm (for kurāmatu, see Zb. 49, and note 6).

39. See above on 1, 16.

40. For ugh (?), cf. Jensen, ZK. ii. p. 32, n. 1, and Br. 789, 791. The king probably had a fever, and so the flow of saliva was of course a favorable sign.

Subba=naddā, II.R. 35, 13c. For ghe-, the precative prefix, and the infix -nīb- cf. Br. p. 539; and for naddā 'pour forth,' scil. 'spittle' (retu), see ittđi, NE. 8, 34: ittđi ina ĝeri 'she spat upon it.' Cf. Ḥdeb. s. v. retu.

43. Ghe-nīb-ta-e. E (UD.DU.)=upā 'go forth,' Sb. 84; but here it clearly stands for the stronger expression nisā 'tear, wrench forth, go forth violently;' cf. IV.R. 15, c. ii. 5, 6 f., exactly as in our text: sunita ghenibta-e=ina zemrišu li-is-su-u, and l. 47c: ghe-ni-ib-ta-e=li-is-su-u. The infix -ta- is here the locative prepositional particle=ina 'out of' (see Prince, JAOS. 1895, p. cxxiv.).

44. For GIŠ-GHAR = upurtu, see above on Nr. 1, 9. The god of the upurtu in this passage is clearly a baleful influence; cf. ZA. i. p. 32, and Delitzsch, Ḥdeb., s. v. upurtu.

For bara-šu, see above, Nr. 1, 26. For gub=nazāzu, cf. Br. 4893.

COMMENTARY.

1. Giu-a-na; lit. ‘his going’; without preposition. The usual form is gin-a-ni-ta, as in Nr. 1, 10.

In mi-nib-dib-dib, the infix - nib plainly supplements the object, i.e. it may be rendered ‘them.’ The usual infix for ‘them’ is - nešin; see HT. p. 145, § 19.

5. BAR.KAK = gabitū, Br. 1908. ZUR.BAR.KAK = uzātu, Br. 9074.

8. The sign KAR.GAN. must mean našu ‘lift up’ (aganatēnu, Br. 3172) in connection with igi ‘face, eye.’ For dug-gi-eš, see above on Nr. 2, 31.

9. This line consists of abbreviations of three formulæ, i.e., perhaps: a) *Asaru igi kar-kar + ? ?
   Marduk lift up thine eyes + ? ?

   b) *Nin-ma-e ni zu-a-mu za-e in-ma-e-zu
   Ša anāku idū atta tidi Whatsoever I know thou must know (also).
c) Gin-na tura-mu dingir-Asaru

Álik mári Marduk!

Go, my son Marduk! IV.R. 22, 7b. With these lines should be compared IV.R. 22, 1ff:—Ed máršu Marduk ippal; mári mina là tidi; mina luraddika? Ša anâku idû atta tidi; álîk mári Marduk, etc. Ea spake unto his son M.; My son, what knowest thou not? what shall I add to thee? Whatesoever I know, thou must know, etc.

11. Note the infix -rab- denoting the second person ‘thee, to thee’; see HT. p. 145, § 19. Incorporation of the pronominal object with the verb is of course well known in agglutinating and polysynthetic tongues; cf. Basque enaten darotuk ‘thou givest it to me’ (t ‘me’); Abenaki (Algic dialect) k’namiol ‘I see thee’ (k = ‘thef’).

12. Nin-igi-lamyu-bu=Ea, Br. 11077; cf. IV.R. 18, 55a; 57a, etc.

The word langu, if preceded by the determ. lu=umelu=namgaru, Br. 11165, and lu Sin, II.R. 47, 66e.

13. GIŠ.SUB.=midpânu ‘bow’, Br. 1431. “Fashioned by pure hands”; cf. HT. 89, 46: qê nabâsi ša ina gâtî . . . . élitîn ib-bab-la ‘cords of wool (?) which are brought with a pure hand,’ i. e., probably by hands made clean by a ritual of purification, like the formal cleansing of the modern Mohammedans.

14. Gin-a; note the -a ending, which may have the force of a postposition here.

17. PA(sig)=maxdêru ‘smite,’ Br. 5576.

18. Literally: ‘When the king at the gazelle a bow-loosening sends forth.’ Šul-bars=misharu (muššaru), Br. 7111; bar=muššaru, 1774. Šul-bar, then, would mean ‘hand loosening.’

19. Nam-tar a(ID)-sig (PA). Nam-tar=šintu ‘fate’ passim. A(ID)-sig(PA)=ašakku, Br. 6592, i. e. a demon of baleful influence which saps away the strength of a patient with persistent force; hence the name, A ‘strength’ + sig ‘smite, destroy’; viz., ašakku ša anêla là umuššaru ‘which does not leave a man’; cf. Hîeb. 144.
20. I dinîr Babbar. For i = aṣû, see Sc. 129 (Br. 3980); also na‘ādu, Sc. 126.
22. It is impossible to make out the last combination in this line. The above translation is suggested by the context.
23. Stîg = damqu, see above on Nr. 1, 27, and Br. 9446.
24. U-me-ni-bar. Bar = uššāru (mašāru) 'let loose,' Br. 1814 (see above on Nr. 3, 18).
25-28. As the gazelle takes up its abode in the field, the curse is to remain with the animal.
26. Ra-ra = ramû, Br. 6382; ašâbu, 6355 'dwell.' It is possible that the šâ in this line may represent the postposition -ku(-šû) = inâ, although it is written here ŠU = gatu and not -ku-(šû); cf. Sfg. p. 17; e-a-ni-šû(QAT) = ana bitišu.
30. DUG-BUR. is very difficult. Dug ga-bur = pâšaru 'collect,' Br. 5894 ff. It is possible that dug-bur may be an error for this, as the character dug is not clear; perhaps the final wedges represent the end of ga (?). In this case the combination would be 'a gatherer of butter.' As it stands, dug = karpatu 'vessel,' Br. 5891, and bur = abnu, 6973. Ni-nun-nu = ximētu 'butter,' Br. 5349.
This line may refer to some ceremony of anointing the king after his purification.

The Tearing of Garments as a Symbol of Mourning, with especial reference to the Customs of the Ancient Hebrews.—By Morris Jastrow, Jr., Professor in the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa.

In a paper prepared for the meeting of the Section for the Historical Study of Religions in 1898, and now published in No. 1 of the papers of that section,¹ I discussed the significance of the custom of placing dust on the head as a symbol of mourning or sign of grief among the ancient Hebrews and other peoples. Incidentally, another custom no less prominent was touched upon, namely, the tearing of garments. This custom merits an independent investigation. As in the former paper, I will confine myself largely to the customs of the ancient Hebrews, though the results of the investigation apply to other nations among whom the custom exists.

The tearing of garments and the putting on of sackcloth are so frequently mentioned together in the Old Testament as to make it evident that the two rites are closely connected with one another. It is sufficient for our purposes to refer to such passages as the following: (1) Gen. xxxvii. 34, where Jacob, upon learning that Joseph is dead, tears his garments and places sackcloth around his loins. (2) 1 Kings xxi. 27, where Ahab, after listening to the denunciation and gloomy prophecy of Elijah, tears his garments as a sign of grief and puts sackcloth on his body. (3) Esther iv. 1, where Mordecai, in grief at the evil fate in store for the Jews, tears his garments and clothes himself in sackcloth and ashes. (4) 2 Sam. iii. 31, where on the occasion of Abner's death David says to Joab and to all the people, "Tear your garments and gird yourselves with sackcloth." (5) 2 Kings vi. 30, Joram the son of Ahab tears his garments and appears before the people with sackcloth on his body underneath. (6) 2 Kings xix. 1 (parallel passage, Is. xxxvii. 1), Hezekiah in deep distress at the impending advance of Sennacherib against Jerusalem tears his garments and covers himself with sackcloth. It is true that frequently the ‘tearing of garments’ is mentioned without the ‘putting on of sackcloth’ (e.g. Ezra ix. 3., Num. xiv. 6), and vice versa; and that the ‘tearing of garments’ is also joined to other symbolical expressions of mourning, grief, or distress, such as fasting (Ezra ix. 5), putting dust on the head (2 Samuel i. 2), plucking the hair or beard (Ezra ix. 3), and the like. Still, the fact that in so many passages the two customs under consideration are united is significant, as is also the circumstance that when thus combined, the tearing is invariably mentioned first. The one act appears to be preparatory to the other.

The verb employed for indicating this tearing is קָרַע, and an examination of its use shows conclusively that a violent action of tearing is denoted by it. 1 Sam. xv. 28, Samuel announces to Saul, קָרַע הָרָעָה אֵת עֵמִיקוֹת יִשְׂרָאֵל מְלָכָה; which clearly means, “Yahwe has wrenched from thee the rulership over Israel.” Similarly, 2 Kings xvii. 21, כָּל קָרַע יִשְׂרָאֵל מְעַל בֵּית רֹם; “For he has torn Israel away from the house of David,” i.e., has torn asunder the bond uniting the two. One may also consult 1 Kings xi. 11, 1 Sam. xxviii. 17, and more particularly 2 Kings ii. 12, where it is said of Elisha, upon seeing the ascension of Elijah, לֶאֶה בָּנָיו וְקָרַע לְשֵׁי לְשֵׁי קָרַע; “He took hold of his garments and tore them in two (lit. in two tears).” The verb קָרַע, therefore, in connection with the ‘tearing’ of the garments implies more than making a mere rent in one’s clothes, and may be used to indicate tearing them off one’s body—a violent removal. If this be so, we should expect to find evidence that it was once customary as a symbol of mourning to strip oneself of one’s garments entirely. Such evidence is indeed forthcoming, and Schwally has already called attention to it, though he has failed to give a satisfactory explanation of the custom. In the first chapter of Micah, the prophet pictures the coming annihilation of the northern kingdom, which arouses in him a profound sense of grief:

“Therefore I will lament and howl,
Go about barefooted and naked,
Start a lament like the jackals,
A mourning like ostriches” (v. 8).

1 Das Leben nach dem Tode nach den Vorstellungen des alten Israel, pp. 18–14.
The terms used—מַסִּיבָה, בֶּתִּילֶה—are the ones commonly employed for indicating the lament for the dead, and the reference to going about ‘barefooted’ and ‘naked’ would therefore be out of place, if the custom of stripping oneself did not at one time exist. Is. xx. 2–4 may be quoted as confirmatory evidence. The prophet is ordered, by way of furnishing an external symbol of his grief at impending misfortune, to remove the simple sackcloth which covers his loins, to take off the sandals from his feet, and go about “naked and barefooted.”

There are indications that among the ancient Arabs likewise the custom prevailed of stripping oneself as a sign of mourning and distress. In the Kitab al-Aghani, there is a story of a woman who in her grief removes her clothing; of a certain Musab b. al-Zubair it is related that he followed a corpse, stripped of his lower garments; and a woman who warns her people of some impending disaster takes off her garments and cries out, “I am the naked Warner.”1 The Hebrew custom may therefore be regarded as the survival of an observance common to at least several branches of the Semites. Naturally a custom of this kind could not have prevailed as a general one after an era of refinement had set in, though it may still have been resorted to on extraordinary occasions. Even though it be assumed that the Issiah did not go about entirely naked, the main point involved, which is the use of a term indicating the removal of one’s clothes, is not affected by this consideration. The figure would lose its force if it did not correspond to what at one time was a reality.

The substitution of the sackcloth in place of the ordinary garments represents the concession made to the ancient custom of stripping oneself, by an age which, through its refinement, gradually came to look upon nakedness as a synonym for disgrace and dishonor. Viewed in this light, the frequent juxtaposition in the O. T. of the tearing, or rather tearing off, of the garments and the girding on of sackcloth becomes intelligible. Scholars are now generally agreed that the saq was originally a loin-cloth2 made of coarse stuff and hanging down from the loins to cover these parts of the body which in the eyes of the Semites constitute one's 'nakedness' prl excellence. If we may be permitted to draw a conclusion from the customs prevailing among people living in a primitive state of culture, it is precisely such a loin-cloth which constitutes the simplest kind of dress, the one most naturally resorted to, and therefore presumably coeval with the beginning of dress in general, viewed as an adornment and not as a mere protection against physical discomfort. The Biblical tradition preserves the recollection of these simple beginnings of dress, for the מָרַן mentioned Gen. iii. 7 and commonly rendered "aprons" are in reality garments hung around the loins.¹ There seems to be no reason to doubt that the dress of the Mohammedan pilgrim known as ihram,² which he substitutes for his ordinary clothes upon approaching the sacred precinct of Mecca, is but a modification of the saq, consisting as it does of a piece of cloth which is wrapped around the loins and hangs down from the knees, and to which another sheet thrown over the back is attached. This modification represents a further concession demanded by the spread of more refined customs, while the express stipulation that one shoulder and arm must be bare is an indication that the original purpose of the upper garment was not to serve as a covering for the whole body. In this second stage, then, the custom of the mourners was to divest themselves of their ordinary clothes consisting of an upper and lower garment, and, discarding the upper covering entirely, to gird themselves with a cloth hanging down from the loins. In the combination of the tearing of garments with the putting on of sackcloth, the former act represents the preparation for the latter, and the essential feature of the observance is the return at a time of grief and distress to the fashions prevailing in more primitive days.

Among the Babylonians also we have traces of the existence of this custom. In my article "Earth, Dust, and Ashes as Symbols of Mourning"³ I have called attention to the scene depicted in one of the sections of the famous "Stele of Vultures" where attendants occupied in burying the dead are stripped bare to the waist and have a cloth around the loins which hangs down to the knees. The scene enables us to proceed further in the explanation of the mourning garb. Whether the attendants are relatives or priests or merely servants is of little moment as compared with the fact, now admitted by most scholars, that they are actually engaged in the burial of the dead, or at all events in some act connected with the burial. The mourning garb is originally the costume prescribed for those who are concerned with the disposal of the dead; and since, as the Old Testament and other ancient sources show, it is ordinarily the immediate relatives \(^1\) who conduct the preparations for the funeral, the funeral garb is naturally identical with the mourning costume. In the article referred to, I have similarly explained the custom of placing earth or dust on the head, as a sign of mourning due to a ceremony, originally connected with the act of earth burial, which involved the building of a mound over the spot where the dead was deposited, the earth for this purpose being carried in a basket and the basket itself placed on the head, where burdens are commonly carried, both in the ancient and the modern Orient.

Coming back to our subject, the question still remains to be answered as to the reason for the original custom of stripping oneself as a sign of mourning, and for the modification of this custom which represents the return to a primitive form of dress. Schwally \(^2\) has properly protested against the method which seeks the explanation of popular customs, such as the one under consideration, in psychological motives. Weeping is a natural expression of emotion, and among people unaccustomed to any restraint of their feelings we can understand that a tendency should exist to tear out the hair under the influence of extreme grief; but the removal of the clothes or the putting of dust on the head are clearly symbolical acts, and must be accounted for in some other way than as a manifestation of humility or as a natural expression of grief. I venture to suggest that the tearing off of the clothes, as well as the return to a simpler form of dress, is an illustration of the fact well known to students of the history of religions, that in religious rites there is in general a marked inclination to return to primitive fashions and earlier modes of life; to re-adopt, as it were, the ways and manners of by-gone days. Religious customs are apt to be a stage or several stages behind the customs of every-day life, and this fact holds good for dress as for other things. Let me adduce a few illustrations. Reference has already been made to the custom of the Mohammedan pilgrim, who on approaching Mecca removes his sandals and ordinary garb in order to put on garments that are clearly survivals of earlier fashions in dress. Sandals represent a comparatively advanced fashion in the Orient, and hence when one enters a sacred place, a spot sanctified by religious associations, he returns to the simpler habits of his ancestors and goes about barefooted. To this day the Mohammedan leaves his sandals at the door of the Mosque before entering it. The command given to Moses to take off his sandals upon approaching the burning bush—sacred because of the presence of Yahwe in the fire (Ex. iii. 5; see also Joshua v. 15)—belongs to the same category of ideas. According to a tradition the correctness of which there is no reason to question, the priests in the temple at Jerusalem, and presumably therefore in the older local sanctuaries of Palestine, performed their service barefooted. If this view be correct, we should expect that at an age when the common dress consisted of only a single garment thrown around the loins—according to Niebuhr still the custom among certain Arab clans—in the performance of religious rites this garment would be removed. There is actually a tradition current among the Arabs that it was customary at one time to perform the circuits around the Kaaba completely stripped. Wellhausen mentions the tradition. Besides Sura vii. 29, to which he refers, there is an important reference to it in Bokhari's collection of traditions which has been overlooked. On the occasion of Mohammed's last visit to the Kaaba, he expressly forbade that any one should "make the circuit of the holy house naked." The prohibition would have no

1 Burton (l. c., II. p. 279) commenting on the antiquity of this dress, known technically as the 'izār, mentions that it is still the common dress of the people in regions lying to the west of the Red Sea.

2 To this day in orthodox synagogues, those members of the congregation who, as supposed descendants of Aaron, have the privilege of blessing the worshippers, remove their shoes before stepping in front of the ark which contains the scrolls of the law.

3 Reste arabischen Heidenthum, p. 108.

meaning had the custom not been common in his days. Moreover, the explanation which Wellhausen offers for the curious custom, as though it were due to refusal or inability on the part of the pilgrims to hire suitable clothes from the Koreish, under whose tutelage the Kaaba stood, seems to me to miss the point completely. Robertson Smith\(^1\) follows Wellhausen in making the appearance of the worshipper in a sanctuary without clothes an alternative to appearing in a special garb, borrowed from the priest, as was the case in the sanctuary of al-Jalsad, or obtained in some other way. According to this point of view, the question of taboo is primarily involved. The ordinary clothes would become unfit for further use, by contact with holy objects; hence other clothes must be provided. In connection with the subject, Robertson Smith brings forward the numerous allusions in the Old Testament and in Arabic literature, as well as examples from other nations than Semites, in which a change of garments is prescribed as an essential condition before approaching the presence of a deity.

It seems to me, however, that the two customs, the appearance at a sanctuary without clothes, and the appearance in different clothes, must be kept apart. At all events, it is inconceivable that at a time when, from whatever motives, religious practices prescribed a change of garments upon approaching a deity, the custom of appearing naked should have arisen as an alternative. ‘Nakedness’ is not looked upon with favor, as a general thing, by the Semites. The ideas associated with it in Semitic diction are ‘shame’ and ‘disgrace,’ and such conceptions of nakedness appear to be quite as ancient as the ordinance to change the clothes before coming to a sacred spot. If, therefore, we find the custom of appearing naked before a deity vouched for, it must have been due to other factors entering into play; and I believe that the tendency, above noted, to return to by-gone fashions in the case of religious observances constitutes one of these factors, and indeed the main factor. I would place the custom of appearing naked before a deity in the same category with that of appearing barefooted in a holy place. Through my colleague, Prof. Lamberton, of the University of Pennsylvania, my attention was directed to the passage in the Iliad, xvi. 234–235, from which it appears that among the Greeks, primitive customs were retained.

in connection with religious rites. The Dodonean priests went barefooted, and slept on the ground. They carried their retention of primitive habits to the extent of not even washing their feet. Leaf, in his note on the passage,¹ properly explains the retention of such customs as due to the phenomenon of religious conservatism, and instances as a parallel the use of stone knives in sacrifice² long after they had gone out of use for the needs of ordinary life. The same observation may be made in the case of the priests of Egypt, who in the days of the Middle Empire retain a skirt of a very ancient pattern; and Erman expressly notes³ that this conservative trait in the matter of dress is even more noticeable when we reach the period of the New Empire, the priests of which wear a costume that dates back to the 4th dynasty. The mantle or double dress is never assumed by them. The long, wide skirt which is the common fashion in the Middle Empire survives among the priests of the New Empire, while during the Middle Empire the priests are again distinguished by the fashion of the narrow, short skirt which belongs to the Old Empire. They thus always lagged behind the fashions of the day. At funeral services, the conservative principle is even more pronounced, for the officiating priest wears the panther skin, which takes us back to the most primitive and rudest style of dress.

Carrying this principle to its logical issue, we reach the thesis for which I enter a plea, that there exists a general tendency in religious observances to revert to (or as we might also put it, to retain) the ways and manners of an earlier age. That in the process some customs involving a return to earlier fashions should have survived without change, while in others modifications were introduced, is perfectly natural. Such a custom as the requirement to appear barefooted might be retained to a late date because it was compatible with even advanced ideas of refinement. Its observance did not involve uncovering that portion of the body which was more particularly regarded as a person's 'nakedness,' and only when in addition to the shoe or sandal a special covering for the leg and foot became customary, might a compromise be effected which permitted the retention of the stocking. On the other hand, the custom of stripping oneself at a time of grief would soon yield to compromises suggested by the growing sense of decency, and would only be resorted to on extraordinary occasions. The first step in this compromise would be to gird on a loin-cloth. From the passage Is. xx. 2–4 it appears that the prophet's ordinary clothes consisted merely of a loin-cloth and sandals, and from other testimony we know that the dress of the seers was of a much simpler character than that worn by other persons. The Mohammedan ihram represents another form of this compromise. From this point of view there is no specific mourning garb, there is merely the general tendency when engaged in any religious observance—prayer, pilgrimage, expiatory rites, or occupation with the dead—to return to more primitive fashions in dress, in accord with the general conservative character inherent in matters connected with religion. In the chapter of Bokhari's collection of traditions already referred to, the question as to the kind of dress which is proper for prayer is fully discussed. Mohammed himself did not prescribe any special dress; but in view of the changes in fashions which had been introduced in the course of time, and the variety of fashions prevailing in the Islamic world, it is significant that in this discussion great stress is laid upon wearing only one garment during the devotions; in evident contrast to the ordinary costume, which consisted of two garments. Various traditions likewise voice a protest against wearing ornamented clothes during prayer, the objection being urged that they distract the attention of the worshipper from his prayers. It is hardly necessary to point out, however, that this cannot be the real reason for the objection.

The whole course of the discussion shows that the chief point involved is the contrast between by-gone and present fashions in dress; and the question raised throughout is, whether in prayer present fashions in dress are permissible. The general tendency is to decide the question in favor of the simpler costumes of former days, as more appropriate for wear during one's devotions. In Mohammed's day, upper garments in addition to lower ones were already common; but a tradition is recorded that when engaged in prayer, the prophet bared his arms and threw his cloak over his shoulders.1 There appears indeed to have been a doubt in the minds of some whether it was proper to keep the sandals on during prayer, and a tradition is introduced to settle the question, which declares that the prophet was in the habit of praying with his sandals on his feet.2 However these and other questions were settled, the mere fact that they were raised illustrates the general disposition to revert to simpler fashions of dress, or at least to imitate such fashions, when engaged in religious observances. With the introduction of more elaborate fashions, the aversion to uncovering any considerable part of the body would become more pronounced; and this feeling, too, is foreshadowed in Bokhari's chapter on prayer, where some of the traditions maintain that the garment should cover the whole body.

By a further extension of this process, we reach the stage in which the essential feature of dress on religious occasions is its general differentiation from the costume of everyday life, rather than a return to any particular fashion. Customs, as is well known, not only survive but undergo modifications long after their original purport has been forgotten; and so in the course of time a form of dress might be prescribed for sacred occasions which would contradict the basic principle of a return to simpler fashions. We do not meet with this stage in Islam, but a noteworthy instance of such a development is the dress prescribed for the priests in the Old Testament, which while preserving perhaps some features of earlier fashions, is on the whole certainly more elaborate than the garments worn in ordinary life. Again, the still more elaborate costumes prescribed for the priests and ecclesiastical dignitaries in the Roman Catholic church may be regarded as illustrating the extent to which the process may be carried by the introduction of new factors. The passages adduced by Robertson Smith3 from the Old Testament and elsewhere are therefore interesting as showing how early the thought that it was essential to appear before a deity in a different garb from that worn in everyday life took a firm hold and tended gradually to set aside the earlier principle that the religious dress was to be marked by its conservative character. But this circumstance does not justify us in placing 'no clothes' and 'different clothes' side by side as though they were alternatives. If Robertson Smith is correct in supposing the direction to change the clothes before coming to a sacred spot to be due to prevailing notions of taboo, then we must seek for a different order of ideas as the basis of the command to appear naked. As has already been remarked, it is difficult to conceive how two such different customs could have arisen at the same time. The custom of appearing naked in the religious ceremonial impresses one as more archaic than the other. As a 'survival' we can account for its being resorted to occasionally even after the custom of changing the clothes, for reasons of taboo or for any other cause, was in vogue; but this supposition implies—and upon this alone stress is laid here—that the two customs are entirely independent of one another, being produced through two different orders of ideas; or, if this seems to be going too far, we may at least say that the custom of changing the clothes grew out of the earlier one through the introduction of new factors. A support for this view is to be found again in Babylonian monuments belonging to the oldest period, on which worshippers are depicted in a naked state; while the second stage, in which the worshipper has recourse to a simple loin-cloth and divests himself of his ordinary clothes, is also represented, as has already been pointed out.

This return to simpler and more primitive fashions may be observed in other funeral and mourning rites of the Semites. Among Arabs and Hebrews in the days of mourning, the couch on which the mourner ordinarily sits and sleeps is forsaken, and he crouches on the floor; a return to the period when couches did not yet form a staple article of furniture. The association of ideas of humility with the custom belongs to a later age which in a self-conscious spirit sought for an interpretation of traditional observances, the real purport of which was no longer understood. Similarly, the removing of all ornaments from the hair and body, and the general neglect of the person, in days of mourning, vouched for in the case of the ancient Hebrews by various passages in the Old Testament, and still observed among the modern Egyptians and elsewhere in the Orient, is due in the first instance not to any inherent aversion to display in days of distress, but to this same tendency to re-adopt the simpler forms of life that belong to a past age. Precisely the same instructions—not to bathe, nor to adorn himself—are prescribed for the Mohammedan pilgrim during the time that he is engaged in performing his religious duties at the Kaaba and the surrounding sacred places. It can hardly be argued that the pilgrimage is a ceremony of expiation, and that for this reason regulations of abstinence are prescribed, for there is no trace of any such idea connected with it in any of the Arabic writers. If however we consider that the visit to the Kaaba (like the visiting of sacred places in general) is an exceedingly old rite antedating the period of elaborate dress and adornment of the person, observed in an age which did not yet enjoy the luxury or feel the necessity of personal cleanliness, or of living in agreeable and comfortable surroundings, we can recognize here the tendency of the participant in a religious rite to transport himself back to the earlier age, and make every effort in his power to observe the ceremonies under the same conditions and in the same way as his remote ancestors.

My contention then is, that the tearing off of the clothing is not primarily a funeral or mourning custom specifically, but a ceremony observed in connection with religious rites in general, prompted by the general tendency to preserve in such ceremonies the fashions of primitive days. At a time when the ordinary garment consisted of a simple cloth thrown around the loins, the participant in the rite removed this cloth and returned to a state of nature, upon entering the presence of a deity or on approaching a sacred spot, or in burying the dead. Later, when the ordinary dress consisted of two or more garments, he returned on the occasion of performing a religious act—be it a pilgrimage, a burial, or what not—to more primitive fashions, by throwing off the upper garment and going about in the simple loin-cloth; or, in a more advanced stage of refinement, by baring merely a portion of the body—arms, shoulders and feet. The custom of priests among various ancient nations to go about barefooted belongs to this category, as does the retention of sandals among certain Catholic orders in these days when the shoe represents the common covering for the foot.

Since from this point of view the stripping off of the garments or the girding on of the loin cloth was not originally a specific mourning custom, but became so merely from the fact that the funeral rites necessarily had a religious character, we can understand that there were other occasions among the Hebrews besides the death of a relative when the custom was resorted to. Attention has been called to the fact that the Hebrew seers at one time went about naked. The example of Saul\(^1\) shows that 'stripping off the garments' was an act preliminary to 'prophesying,' and hence even at a later age the prophet's garb is characterized as more primitive than the ordinary fashions of the day. It is clearly because 'prophecy' is a religious act that 'nakedness' is associated with it.

From such an application of the custom must be disassociated the girding of sackcloth around the loins as a genuine symbol of humility and submission; as e.g., when the servants of Ben-Hadad come to appeal for mercy to King Ahab, they are depicted with sackcloth around their loins and ropes on their heads (1 Kings xx. 31). Such an act is at the other end of the chain, directly dependent upon the use of sackcloth as a symbol of mourning, and contemporaneous with the period when the custom of tearing off the garments had become specifically associated with mourning for a lost relative. The garb of mourning naturally becomes also the symbol of distress in general, and distress is of necessity involved in a display of submission or in an appeal for mercy. Hence also the messenger who brings the news of death or of some other calamity, or the one who announces an impending misfortune, tears his garments and girds himself with the loin-cloth; and similarly persons in distress strip off their garments (Num. xiv. 6; 2 Kings v. 8) or tear their tunics, and have recourse to that other mourning symbol, the placing of earth or dust on the head (1 Sam. iv. 12; 2 Sam. i. 2, xv. 32); or they appear with their beards disfigured, with torn garments, and with incisions in their bodies (Jer. xli. 5).

We can also understand how, in the course of further development, the feeling of indignation should come to be manifested by similar acts.\(^2\)

In all these instances we are obliged to assume that the tearing off of the clothes and the putting on of sackcloth were old established customs, which had come to be specifically regarded as symbols of mourning, and then were still further extended to other occasions. Be it emphasized once more that popular customs persist in their vigor long after their original purport is forgotten. Becoming merely or specifically symbols of mourning, it is easy to see how the tearing off of the garments should become disassociated from the act to which it was once preliminary—the girding on of the sackcloth—and that both should continue to exist independent of each other. It seems necessary, however, to assume certain intermediate stages before this separation of the two customs was brought about. The tearing off of the garments was gradually transformed into a mere tearing of the garments; and the sackcloth, instead of constituting the only article of clothing worn in days of mourning or on occasions of distress, became a supplementary garment worn either underneath the ordinary clothes or even over them. The Jews in Persia still tear off their upper garment in the time of mourning and bare themselves to the waist; but elsewhere in the Orient it was the custom, as early as the days of Jesus, merely to tear off a piece of the garment, and this custom was still further modified until a mere rent in a seam was regarded as answering all requirements. With this transformation of the 'tearing off' into the mere 'tearing,' the way was prepared for the complete separation of the tearing of the garments from the putting on of the loin-cloth; and that this separation was already brought about in pre-exilic days follows from the passages to which direct or indirect reference has been made, in which the one custom is recorded without reference to the other. A curious result of this separation is the prominence which the tearing or tearing off of the garments—originally subsidiary and merely the preliminary act—acquires as against the girding on of the loin-cloth. While the latter continues in force as a symbol of mourning and then of distress, grief and humility in general, the tearing of garments in combination with other symbols of mourning or grief is far more frequently introduced. In post-Biblical literature we hear but little of the putting on of sackcloth around the loins, whereas the tearing of garments continues in force and survives at the present day among orthodox Jews (in both Orient and Occident) in the conventional rent made in the coat on the occasion of the death of a relative.

It has already been pointed out that appearing in different clothes on occasions of a religious character belongs to a different category of ideas from the tearing off of the garments with the various modifications which this custom has undergone; and while it lies beyond the province of this paper to investigate further what relation, if any, exists between the two customs, it is not impossible that the growth of refinement and the advance of the aesthetic sense should have tended toward the substitution of the change of the clothes for the mutilation of them, as a more appropriate means of manifesting grief. Of course such a substitution could not have taken place until the time when the conscious return to more primitive fashions in days of mourning no longer played any part. On the other hand, foreign influences may also have been at work in bringing about the custom of having a special mourning garb. Among the Chinese, as is well known, the colors appropriate for mourning are white, brown and yellow, and the putting on of the mourning garb is an elaborate ceremony undertaken on the seventh day after the death of a near relative.\(^1\) The sons of a deceased father put on garments made of hemp of the natural color, which are worn over the ordinary clothes; the grandsons are distinguished by hemp cloth of a yellowish tinge. No red garments or silks or satins are permitted for three years. With the custom of special garments for the mourners are also connected observances emphasizing the same principle of a return to by-gone fashions. So for 49 or 60 days the mourners do not sleep in beds nor sit on chairs. The hempen garments of the natural color and the yellow garments are exchanged at certain intervals or on stated occasions for white cotton clothes and brown sackcloth, again placed over the ordinary garments.\(^2\) Among the Greeks, we find special garments prescribed for the priests; the long chiton, white or purple, the latter being set aside for occasions when the gods of the nether world were invoked, while again other garments were prescribed for festivals.\(^3\) For the people in general dark clothes were prescribed in post-Homeric times as appropriate in days of mourning'; and while no great stress appears to have been laid upon the observance, it is from the Greeks, as would appear, that the present Occidental custom of wearing dark (and then black) clothes as a sign of mourning was derived. The Book of Judith (viii. 5, τὰ ἱμάτια τῆς χερσετῆς) furnishes the evidence that in the second century B.C. it was customary for widows in Palestine to wear a special mourning dress for the space of several years, while beneath this they continued to wear the loin-cloth. This combination of the earlier with what is clearly a later fashion is a curious illustration of the compromise between religious conservatism and the fashion plate. To both influences women have been at all times more subject than men, and since we do not find at any time a special mourning dress prescribed for men among the Hebrews, there are strong reasons for suspecting foreign influence as at least one factor in accounting for the introduction of the 'widow's weeds' in Palestine. The character of Judith, in the book of that name, is modelled in part upon that of Tamar, the daughter-in-law of Judah, as depicted in Genesis, chap. xxxviii; and since the story in Genesis in its present form is at least some centuries earlier than the Book of Judith, the reference to "garments of widowhood" in Gen. xxxviii. 14 obliges us to carry back the custom to a still earlier period. Still, even this does not preclude foreign influence. The close contact existing among the various nations of antiquity through commercial and political intercourse from at least the period of Persian supremacy rendered the Hebrews in post-exilic days peculiarly subject to the attraction of fashions prevailing outside of Palestine; and so far as the Arabs are concerned, their ancient customs underwent profound modifications and transformations long before the advent of Mohammed.

1 Busolt, Bauer, und Muller, Griechische Staats- Kriegs- und Privat- alterthämer, p. 423. Ashes, too, were smeared over the clothes (ib., 482).

2 Dark blue clothes are already mentioned in the Iliad (xxiv., 94) for occasions of mourning; in the Persian period, all relatives of the deceased wear dark clothes. Busolt, ib., 483.)

3 Both Judith and Tamar are widows. Tamar is a 'J-hudith' by virtue of her relationship to Judah. Like Judith (x. 3, 4), Tamar removes her garments of widowhood (בנהי אלתנון ; cf. Judith viii. 5) and ornaments her person (Gen. xxxviii. 14). She offers herself to Judah (vs. 15); Judith offers herself to Holophernes (xii. 16-18.)
As a result of this investigation, I venture to claim that the custom of removing the ordinary clothing and returning to the simpler fashions of by-gone days is the specifically Hebrew mourning custom, to be accounted for by the general tendency to maintain old fashions in religious ceremonies. On the other hand, the appearing in different clothes in the days of mourning, so far as it existed among Hebrews and Arabs, is due to the working of different factors, among which the influence of similar customs among various other nations of antiquity is to be taken into consideration. The older and specifically Hebrew (or perhaps general Semitic) custom passes through various phases of development, and leaves its traces in the mourning rites of modern Jews and modern Arabs; whereas the other custom, the special mourning garb, is only met with sporadically among the Hebrews, and never became general either with Hebrews or Arabs, or, for that matter, with any branch of the ancient Semites so far as is known.

Of course this thesis does not preclude the possibility of a merging of mourning rites drawn from various parts of the world. Indeed, there is a curious parallel in the modern Orient to the Occidental custom of wearing a mourning band around the hat. This custom is now limited to males, and formerly long streamers were attached to the band; but in Egypt female relatives at a time of mourning bind a strip of linen or cotton stuff or muslin—generally of a blue color—around the head, with the ends hanging down the back. The custom appears to be an old one in Egypt, for in the funeral scenes depicted on the walls of ancient Egyptian tombs we find women with a similar band around the head. Whether the hat- or head-band is a modification of the special mourning dress, is a question into which we cannot enter, nor is there enough material at hand for deciding it; but the presence of the same custom in the modern Orient and Occident illustrates the readiness with which the mourning customs of one country pass over to another. There is no occasion for surprise, therefore, at finding one and the same people employing two such different methods of symbolizing grief as the mutilating of garments and the providing of special garbs for occasions of mourning; nor is it surprising even to find both methods combined and resorted to by one and the same individual.

The Influence of Persian Literature on the German Poet Platen.—By Arthur F. J. Remy, A.M., of Columbia University, N. Y. City.

Only a brief outline will here be given of this paper, which itself was presented in abstract. It gave the partial results of an investigation of the general subject of 'The Influence of India and Persia upon German Poetry.' The investigation itself is to be published as a monograph in the course of the year.

Attention was first called to the ghazal-form in Persian poetry and its earliest appearance in German literature with Rückert in 1821. After this had been given as an introduction, the article turned directly to a discussion of Platen's Ghaselen. Reasons were given for confining the discussion to those Ghaselen that appeared in the years 1821 and 1822. Especial stress was laid on the fact that the ghazals of 1824 were oriental only in form, and were, therefore, not considered in the brief abstract.

The article then went on to show that Platen's Ghaselen are not translations from the Persian, but that they are really original productions 'dem Hafis nachgeführt und nachgedichtet,' much in the same manner as Goethe's divan-poems. They were shown to follow as closely as possible the technical rules of Persian verse, and were found to make use throughout of Persian images and metaphors, in fact to be modeled closely after the ghazals of Hāfiz. Parallels were adduced from Hāfiz's odes themselves to bear out this statement with regard to the usage of rhetorical figures. Out of numerous illustrations which were cited only one need here be given. It is chosen to show with what freedom Platen imitated his oriental models. In the 13th Ghasel (Cotta ed., Stuttg., Vol. II, p. 11) Platen has:

'Schenke! Tulpen sind wie Kelche Weines, Gieb den Freunden, gieb sie hin, die Tulpe!'

This, it was suggested, probably drew its inspiration from such a line as Hāfiz, Ode 541 (Brockhaus ed., Leipzig, 1863)
‘Saki come, for the goblet of the tulip has become filled with wine.’

A paragraph was then devoted to a number of similes in Platen’s poems which fully catch the Persian spirit, but for which no close parallel had yet been found in that part of Persian poetry which had been examined in the investigation as likely to have been accessible to Platen. The interest of such similes, it was pointed out, lies in the fact that they show how much the occidental poet had come under the oriental influence.

Yet not only in spirit, but also in form, these poems were proved to be close imitations of Hāfiz’s odes. In those ghazals called ‘Spiegel des Hafis’ Platen, after the manner of Persian poets, even regularly introduces the name Hafiz into the last couplet of his German imitations. End-rhymes of one and two syllables are naturally common enough, but the peculiarly characteristic Persian rhymes which extend to several syllables or even to a whole phrase were found to be very frequent,—again a direct importation from the East. To illustrate how successfully Platen reproduces the ٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌٌ.png
On the Relative Chronology of the Vedic Hymns.—By Maurice Bloomfield, Professor in Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md.

Let us say that the number of metrical stanzas in the Vedic literature, aside from variant forms of the same stanza, amounts to 20,000 more or less. The subject-matter of these stanzas varies very greatly; there is considerable difference of style, grammar, and lexicon; the metres, though in the main the same, are handled with varying degrees of adhesion to what seem to be the metrical laws; the stanzas as collected into the traditional hymns of the redactors are by no means always engaged with the same theme within one and the same hymn; and a lively tradition reports a considerable number of ancient sages (ṛśis) as the authors of a great many of these stanzas. It is not possible that one author should have composed these stanzas by himself during his lifetime, nor is it possible that a coterie or school of authors of a comparatively brief period represent both the alpha and the omega of authorship in these fields.

The nature of Vedic chronology—if we may speak of any at all—precludes any attempt to fix the date of individual hymns, or the different types and styles of hymns, either by calendar or dynasty. Practically no such attempts have been made; instead, the relative age of the hymns and stanzas has called out much speculation and assumption, as well as painstaking investigation. Entire collections of hymns, single hymns, parts of hymns, and single stanzas have been characterized, with degrees of confidence varying from almost whispered suspicion to clarion-voiced confidence, as very early, quite early, early; and late, quite late, very late. There has been unanimity, as, e.g., in the case of the tenth book of the RV.: this everybody describes as late. There has been the greatest possible disagreement, as, e.g., in the case of the eighth book of the RV.: this has been shown to be the earliest as well as the latest of the so-called family-books of that collection.

The habits of mind which have given rise to these judgments are not hard to describe. They are based in the first instance upon an entirely justifiable impression. In the midst of the hymnal tradition the Rig-Veda looms up as the largest, the most important collection; without doubt a large proportion of its material belongs to the earliest recorded literary efforts of the Hindus; no less certainly the period of the redaction of this material is fully as early, if not earlier, than the period of the redaction of the other collections. This is shown very clearly by those stanzas of the RV. which are reproduced with more or less variation in AV., SV., and YV. In the large majority of cases these variant readings are as good or better in RV. than in the other collections. In the large majority of cases, we say, and this ensures the RV. its position. But not in all cases: no amount of haggling will deprive the other collections of their occasional better readings. This fact cannot be brushed aside lightly; if the Sāma-Veda has, say, two dozen better readings which cannot be explained as later aesthetic, opportunist, or shrewdly learned improvements of the Sāmavedins; if these better readings are really, let us say, prehistoric, then we must assume a current of independent Sāmavedic tradition, however scantily its waters may trickle. And so on with the AV. and YV. tradition. We must not neglect to make here a sharp distinction between redaction and authorship: a collection made at a later date may, of course, include material composed at an earlier time. Within the RV. itself there has been room for the work of a second impression, scarcely less justifiable than the first. The impression that operates here is that of a certain extraneousness of parts of the collection. By processes of paring and trimming the 1,000 hymns of the RV. with their 10,000 stanzas are reduced to a lesser number in order to get at the inner kernel, an older and more genuine RV. The tenth book, forming one end, and a very large one at that, contains a great deal of material, especially of the Atharvanic sort, which is undoubtedly foreign to the main theme of the RV., the worship of the forces of nature, and their anthropomorphic precipitates, the personal gods (Indra, Agni, etc.). But why must all such matter really be of more recent date, along with the same substance in the AV.? The answer that is made to this question will engage us later on. The tenth book contains also a great deal of non-Atharvanic matter, among other things the wedding-charms and funeral-hymns of the Veda. We cannot well imagine Vedic Hinduism without, e.g., the little Yama-Saṁhitā, as we may call it, RV. X. 10–18. Yet this has not been spared entirely the charge of relative lateness. Here is where the difference between time of redaction and time of composition is particularly important. We may well believe that the hymns of book X. were assembled and added to the rest at a later time, without prejudicing our belief in the extreme antiquity of some or even all its hymns. Think of it, can there have been a time in which Yama, the son of Vivasvānt (Avestan Yima, the son of Viśvāṅvant), his heaven, and his Cerberus dogs, were so much in abeyance in the minds of the Vedic folk that they had nothing to say about them; only by a later recrudescence of these fancies were they finally embalmed into those stanzas that are on the whole the most interesting in early Vedic religion! And again think of it, the vast stretch of magic practices, good and evil, which extend from the RV. through the ritual, the law-books, the Epic, down to the Daśakumāra-carita and later, according to the same kind of assumption, also failed to obtain any literary expression at a time when the so-called family books of the RV. had been composed and gathered! Silently, without charm or prayer, or, at best, only with scant prose formulas, we are asked to believe, were carried on all the endless practices that really reach the heart of Hindu life: medical practices, and practices which secure long life; the practices connected with the lives of kings, priests, women, village community; marriage, birth, pupilhood, householdership; death, funeral, and worship of the Fathers.

Other parts of books, single hymns, and, last but not least, groups of stanzas or single stanzas, usually at the end of hymns, are cast out, almost always under the rule of the impression that they do not fit in, either with the arrangement, or the subject-matter of that main theme of the book, the worship of Agni, Indra, Sūrya, the Āgyins, etc. At least the following caution ought to be observed: before throwing out we ought to know the reason why the redactors placed these extra materials where we find them. The redactors were reasonable men: what is to us antiquity was for them at least relatively the living present. The characterization of stanzas as ‘secondary appendages,’ ‘meaningless rubbish,’ and the like, is invariably another way of saying that our knowledge has come to an end. Even now the profounder study of many a hymn, especially in relation to the practicalities of Vedic life and worship, has vindicated a large number of so-called appendages, and shown them to be a very real part of the main body of the hymn. E. g., RV. i. 126, a hymn in praise of a generous patron of priests (dīnastuti), winds up with two frankly obscene stanzas. No greater contrast imaginable: at first sight the conclusion is irresistible that these two odd and very strange stanzas lay about loose and were by pure accident attached to this particular hymn. When, however, we again find, at the end of RV. viii. 1, an obscene stanza (34), preceded by a dānastuti, the organicity, so to say, of the connection becomes highly probable. We are carried into that strange medley of ‘gift-praises,’ didactic stanzas, riddles, and obscenities, known as the kuntāpa (AV. xx. 127–136; Čaṅkh. Čr. xii. 14 ff.; and elsewhere). Very popular as these materials obviously are, they are imbedded deeply in the liturgy of many of the great Vedic sacrifices. I have suggested recently that the bestowal of gifts upon the priests, resulting in the ‘gift-praises,’ was followed by all sorts of hilarities which finally bridged over the gap that there is between the truly solemn parts of these sacrifices to what for lack of a better term we may call a kind of liturgic saw-kneipe.’ That is, if the theory be correct, the rich gifts to the priests lead in many instances to gormandizing and drunkenness, and these again were followed—the practice is not entirely unknown in our day—by shallow witticisms, by obscene talk, and worse. ¹ Anyhow, the light-hearted rejection of RV. i. 126. 6, 7, and viii. 1. 34 is out of the question; on the contrary, these stanzas strengthen the rapidly growing conviction that the RV., as we have it, in common with the other Vedas, is a liturgic collection—a large mantra-pātha, so to say, for a more primitive chain of sacrifices and practices than that which is recorded in the Brāhmaṇas and Sūtras. Bergaigne has shown that the apparently independent character, in form and subject-matter, of many final stanzas in the RV. is organic and practical, not hap-hazard and redactorial; e. g., the so-called paridhāṇiyā-stanzas; the lengthening of final stanzas; and the conclusions in triṣṭubh-metre of certain hymns in jagati-metre. ² Cf. also my remarks on RV. x. 16. 13, 14, and vii. 103. 10, respectively, AJPh. xi. 343 ff.; JAOS. xvii. 178.

When, finally, these processes have laid bare the supposed inner kernel of the RV., the latter attracts attention first of all by its monotony. The picture of ancient Hindu life that could be derived from it is of the haziest sort. Excepting that it includes the practices connected with the pressure and sacrifice of the soma-drink it is purely mythological; prevailingly it alludes to real life only in simile and metaphor, though, of course, the ordinary benefits that men crave are asked of the gods in very general terms. Inasmuch as this material is of paramount importance in the greater Vedic ritual (grāuta) with three fires and many priests, as laid down in the Brāhmaṇas and Črāuta-Sūtras, we may conveniently designate these hymns and their diction as ritualistic or hieratic. On the other hand, because the excluded parts of the RV. are in the main within the sphere of the Atharvan and the house-practices, let us designate their hymns and diction as Atharvanic or popular (demotic). Indeed the two terms hieratic and popular will serve our purpose best.

At this point what is in the first place a mere impression produced by the facts of external arrangement, by the fact that the hieratic and popular materials do not blend any better than oil and water, is reinforced by certain metrical and linguistic considerations. The chief metrical consideration is Oldenberg’s theory of the anuṣṭubh. The original Atharvanic anuṣṭubh stanzas, i.e., those that do not reproduce with more or less variation the RV. stanzas that deal with the anthropomorphic nature-gods, differ from these RV. anuṣṭubhs on the one hand, and from the Epic and Buddhistic ġloka on the other. In the strictly Rig-Vedic anuṣṭubhs the first pāda of each hemistich regularly ends in a diambus or second pacon (u - u u); in the Epic and Buddhistic ġloka, still more regularly, in a first epitrite or antispast (u - u). On the other hand, each Atharvanic (and Grhya) hemistich permits these as well as all other possible feet of four syllables (u u u u): see, e.g., AV. i. 1; i. 2; i. 7; i. 8; v. 10; and xii. 4. The Atharvanic and Grhya anuṣṭubh may be designated as the popular anuṣṭubh in distinction from the hieratic anuṣṭubh of the soma-hymns in the RV.: a hymn like RV. x. 85 (the wedding-stanzas) is, of course, in popular anuṣṭubh.

But if we consider the quantitative freedom of the eight-syllable line of the Younger Avesta, there is reason to assume that the popular (freer) anuṣṭubh is by construction and chronology earlier than the better regulated hieratic (somic) anuṣṭubh. The theory that the development of the popular foot took place from u - u u (hieratic) through u u u u (popular), to u - u u (Epic and Buddhistic) is on its face improbable; in the light of all Hindu metrical development the change from the regulated type u - u u to the less free types that must be expressed by is, to say the least, very difficult. Instead, we may assume that the Aryan free octosyllabic lines, grouped into two hemistichs of sixteen syllables, developed (on slight prehistoric iambic tendencies) the iambic cadence at the end of each hemistich, and continued so in the popular poetry until the beginnings of the Epic and Buddhist āloka. At the same time a more exquisite treatment at the hands of the hieratic poets developed the Rig-Vedic (somic) anūstubh on a parallel line, by repeating the final cadence of each hemistich before the caesura in its middle, i. e., at the end of each pāda.

Linguistically and stylistically the popular hymns are found to be related more closely than the hieratic hymns to that dialect or dialects which are at the base of the Brāhmaṇas, Sastras, and the later vehicles of literary expression in general, the classical Sanskrit, of course, not excepted. Because the popular hymns favor certain phonetic habits, grammatical forms, and lexical materials of the prose parts of the Veda and the later Sanskrit literature in general, therefore the popular hymns are later. But, lo and behold, these discussions seem to have been carried on without proper regard to comparative grammar and etymology: almost all the linguistic forms that are looked upon as indications of late date are in reality as old, still more often older than the entire history of the Aryan language in India. The latest essay on this subject, that of E. V. Arnold, in this Journal, vol. xviii., 203 ff. is as conspicuously deficient in this matter as are all its predecessors. Once, and only once, in the course of the long, elaborate, and diligent article, whose statistics will always remain of value, the author seems to have a vision of the broader canvass upon which his grammatical figures do in reality stand. It is in connection with the ‘late,’ classical infinitive in -tum. ‘Throughout the whole Vedic period the classical form -tum is rare, though it becomes more common in AV. It is noticeable that the form in -tum also occurs in Latin, and is therefore presumably primitive; yet it is entirely absent from the earliest hymns of the RV. This fact must be a warning against drawing conclusions as to date from isolated phenomena, however striking they may at first sight appear’ (l. c., p. 310). Very true, but why not apply the same very sound observation to the ‘late’ dual in -āu. This ending -āu appears in astāu = Goth. ahtau: it is not only a form that existed in Indo-European times, but is sufficiently old and prehistoric to have played a part in the ‘glottogonic’ events that brought about the derivative ordinals, Latin octāv-us, Greek ὀκτάς-ς, whose u (ε') is surely identical with the u of aṣṭāu. Indeed, Professor Meringer¹ has shown that the dual endings -āu and -ā are two sanskṛti-forms of the same ending, their original distribution being -āu before vowels, ā before consonants, with secondary (‘euphonic’) loss of u. Genetically, therefore āu preceded -ā. Similar very obvious considerations show that the instrumental plural of a-stems in -āis and -ēhīs are both prehistoric. Sk. vṛkhāis = Avest. vēhrkāi = Gr. λύκος = Lith. vil-kais; and Vedic vṛkebhīs = Avest. vēhrkāehi. Originally the ending -ēhīs seems indeed in this class of nouns to have been secondary to -āis, having been borrowed either from the consonantal noun-stems, or from the pronominal declensions. A moment’s reflection suffices also to establish the prehistoric character of both the nominative plurals in -ās and -ānas belonging to the a-stems.

Of more isolated morphological cases ‘late’ hwrayāmi is especially instructive. If there is any form which belongs organically to the ‘popular’ and not to ‘hieratic’ language it is hwrayāmi. Yet it is prehistoric, = Avest. zbayemī. That the type kurōti, kurū (cf. Ved. turute) is structurally very old is now the accepted view of comparative grammar.² Or let us consider the ‘late’ stem pānthān in relation to ‘early’ pānthā. Not till the AV, do the ordinary Sk. forms pānthānah and pānthānam turn up, and yet they are pre-Vedic, as is shown by Avestan pānthānum. The truth is that the type pānthānam is just as old as, if not older than, the type pānthā(i)-m. It is useless to multiply the cases in which comparative grammar and etymology shows that the ‘late’ popular forms are in reality prehistoric: it would be easy to show that the phonetics, morphology and lexicon of the popular language contribute just as much to the stock of common Indo-European, or common Indo-Iranian materials, as do the corresponding data of the hieratic language.

The question is therefore largely one of dialect, style or subject-matter: this is the primary point of view from which the language of the popular hymns must be compared with the hieratic hymns.

A given form or word in the lexicon is not necessarily of recent origin because it begins to crop out in the tenth or first book of the RV., appears (a fortiori) still more frequently in the popular collection of the AV., and is the regular form of Vedic or Sanskrit prose; nor, consequently, are hymns necessarily late because they abound in forms and words that are strangers to the diction of the hieratic hymns. Here is the bad logic: the hieratic language is certainly old; the popular language is not hieratic: therefore it is late (black is a color; red is not black; therefore red is not a color). A necessary preliminary to a more successful study of the relative chronology of the Vedic hymns is their separation into classes; at least two classes, hieratic and popular, but probably more. For example, the Sāma-hymns (pragātha) of the eighth and first books (hymns 1–50) are by no means to be compared directly with the strictly Rig-books, for subject-matter cannot help influencing style as well as choice of words and grammar. As a preacher in the pulpit may glide in and out of biblical (archaic) diction in the course of his sermon: at one moment he may use the language of Isaiah or the Psalms, at another the latest and most forceful popular speech of the day; as the poetry of a given period may range from dithyramb to doggerel, so it is with the language of the Vedic hymns. Attempts to establish the relative chronology of the Vedic hymns will necessarily always remain difficult and subjective, but the problem will be relieved of a great deal of its perplexity by dealing with the hymns according to their subject-matter, and by holding up each grammatical and lexical fact to the light that shines from the related languages. Within each class of hymns there is still room for observations on relative chronology. If we find a hymn devoted, say, to Indra’s exploits in connection with Vṛtra and the other demons, using persistently the verbs karomi, hveyāmi, or the dual in -ān and the instrumental in -āīs, we may assign to it a relatively late period. But the same grammatical phenomena, say in a medicinal charm are absolutely otiose, because they are prehistoric and have been the normal unaffected forms of the popular language from the very beginning of Hindu tradition.
On ṛcīṣama, an epithet of Indra.—By MAURICE BLOOMFIELD.
Professor in Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md.

The word is restricted to eight occurrences in the Rig-Veda, being used there solely as an epithet of Indra. Notwithstanding its marked physiognomy the attempts to explain the word have been provisional only. Yāska, Nir. vi. 23, finds it in the list of cruces Näigh. iv. 3, and explains it lamely by ṛcā samaḥ ‘like a song, or ṛcā,’ a rendering which remains authoritative for Śāyana and the rest of Hindu tradition. Grassmann has, etwa ‘glänzend;’ Ludwig, ‘stralen,’ or ‘tönend,’ and, ‘laut singend,’ all of which is mere etymology on the root ṛcā, leaving the three syllables ṛcīṣa in the position of suffixal waste matter. Once, in justifiable perplexity, Ludwig retains the word as a proper name ṛcīṣama (RV. vi. 46. 4); the Petersburg Lexicons attempt no translation at all.

The metrical language of the Veda and to some extent also its rhythmic prose is dominated by certain well-known laws or preferences as regards the succession of quantities. Perhaps the most prominent of these is the love of a diiambus, fostered doubtless to a considerable extent in the final cadences of verse-lines of eight and twelve syllables, where the diiambus is altogether the rule. This preference is shown in two distinct ways. First, when the first three of a group of four syllables are naturally or historically short the second is lengthened, e. g., pibā-pibā; tuvi-magha, as metrical doublet of tuvi-magha; puru-tama, as metrical doublet of puru-tama; aṭṭānat (cf. agnīḥ hātārinī vidāthāyā jījanam, RV. x. 11. 3); intensive noun-stems, calācāla-, sarīsṛpa-, etc.: intensive verb bhāribharti (in addition to bhāribhrati); etc. From the investigations of De Saussure and Jakob Wackernagel we know that this rhythmic type probably reaches back to prehistoric times (Gr. σοφότρως, σοφότρωτος, τερεσ-σώμ, etc.). Second, when in a succession of four syllables the first two are short, the third long, the craving after diiamb is satisfied by the more drastic expedient of lengthening the second short syllable and shortening the long third syllable; e. g., "su didhī (asmākam agne maṅgavanāsu didhī, RV. i. 140. 10*), as metrical doublet of "bho didhī (ādudho agne vṛṣabhō didhī, RV. iii. 15. 4*); adidipam (Kāṭha. S.), as metrical doublet of saṁ didipah (RV. viii. 48. 6).

1 Une Loi Rythmique de la Langue Greque (Mélanges Græce, pp. 737-748).
2 Das Dehnungsgesetz der Griechischen Composita (Basel, 1889).

With these facts in mind we may bring ēśāma down from the clouds. We can safely assume that ēśāma is metricaly changed ēśāma, i. e. a compound of ē and sāma. This might mean 'he who sings the Sāmans,' but for the strangeness of such an epithet as applied to Indra (cf. perhaps RV. i. 173); moreover the verb gāi, rather than arc is typical for the singing of the Sāmans. We may therefore translate ēśāma by 'he for whom the sāman is sung upon the ōc.' This is familiar: the sung sāman is based upon the spoken ōc, e. g. ČB. viii. 1. 3. 3, roī sūma giy-ate. The ōc is the womb (fem.) from which springs the sūman (masc.) ČB. iv. 3. 2. 3; or, the ōc and the sūman are respectively man and wife, typifying cohabition, AV. xiv. 2. 71; AB. iii. 22; ČB. iv. 6. 7. 11; viii. 1. 3. 5, and many other places. As an epithet of Indra ēśāma in the sense just assumed is exception-able.

Another compound involving exactly the same metrical law is tuvīrvāṇ, RV. x. 64. 4. 16. This is not, as the Pet. Lexs. assume = tuvīrāva 'loudly shouting,' nor as Grassmann assumes, 'very refreshing' (from tuvi + irāvat = irāvat), but it means 'giving mightily' (tuvīrvāṇ = tuvi + rāvan); cf. the connection in x. 64. 16. Its opposite is ā-rāvan 'not giving, illiberal, hostile.' In compounds that have for their second member an agent-noun in a the same metrical tendency works very strongly both in poetry and in prose. Thus VS. x. 28 there is the formula bahukāra gṛyasakara bhāyaskara, i. e., the type ō ugen alternates with the type ō u h, exactly as the reduplicated aorist furnishes the types adiikṣam (ō u h and ajijanam (u u h). The Kāṇva-version of the above mentioned formula, VSK. xi. 8, 5, varies the formula so that it reads, priyaṅkara gṛyasakara bhāyaskara: the choice of priyaṅkara (why not priyakāra?) illustrates, just as does ēśāma for ēśā-śāma, or ajijian for ajijianam, the constant preference of the language of the type ō u h as compared with ō u h. Hence the rapid propagation of apparently syntactical compounds like janam-sahā, abhayakāra, puram-dara, sakaṁ-bhara, talpe-ṣaya, and finally the
the way of the belief that the agent nouns in the second member of compounds of the types -kara, -jaya, -dhara, -bhara, etc., are derived by inorganic metrical change from -kāra, -jāya, -dhāra, -bhāra, etc. The latter then rather than the former are the true alogues of Greek -βολης -φωνης -φόρης etc., in composition. It is important to bear in mind that all this is in support of 'Brug-mann's law': I. E. o = Sk. ā in open syllables.
The Vaṭa-sāvitrī-vrata, according to Hemādri and the Vratārka.—By ALBERT HENRY ALLEN, of San Francisco, California. Presented by Professor Lanman.

The beautiful Sāvitrī myth forms appropriately enough the basis of a religious rite designed particularly for Hindu women, to be performed by those who sought by its pious observance to obtain the virtues and blessings which distinguish the Indian Alcestis. This rite will be found described in Hemādri’s Caturvargacintāmaṇi, adhyāya 21 of the Vratakhaṇḍa, in the second part of volume two as published in the Bibliotheca Indica, and also in the Vratārka of Čaṇḍakara, son of Nilakaṇṭha, of which I have used a lithographed copy belonging to Prof. C. R. Lanman.

Hemādri belongs to about the middle of the 13th century A.D.¹ The Vratārka was written in 1678, says Aufrecht.² Citations from Hemādri are found among its other quotations. Both seem to rest ultimately upon the Purāṇas in their accounts of the innumerable vrata of which they treat. In its account of the Sāvitrī-vrata the Vratārka draws mostly from the Skanda-purāṇa, while Hemādri quotes for the most part from the Bhaviṣyottara. Some portion of the matter cited by the Vratārka from the Skanda is also quoted by Hemādri from the same source.

Both the Caturvarga and the Vratārka contain in their accounts of the Sāvitrī rite a version of the Sāvitrī myth. These differ in extent of treatment and in a few points of detail from the Sāvitrī upākhyāna in the Mahābhārata (the Pativrata-māhātmya-parvan of the Vana-parvan = iii., sects. 292–299). These two versions are of about equal length, the Caturvarga’s somewhat shorter, and contain about 120 člokas each. The MBh. version contains 297. Both of the Purānic versions are loosely constructed as far as language is concerned, but as the Vratārka is not available in printed form a few of its better passages might be cited nevertheless. Its source for the kathā is the Skanda-purāṇa, that of Hemādri is the Bhaviṣyottara.

Referring for the details of the story to the Mahābhārata version, I may give here a brief outline. Āśvapati, king of Madra, being childless, makes supplication to the goddess Sāvitri for a son. The goddess appears, and promises him not a son but a daughter. In the Purānic versions the goddess declares that the daughter will exalt two households, and that her name is to be Sāvitri, that of the goddess herself. These points are not found in the Mahābhārata story. The girl Sāvitri comes to maturity, and attains such matchless beauty that no suitor dares ask her hand. Her father therefore sends her forth with regal equipment to make her svayaṃvara. She chooses Satyavant, son of the blind old king Dyumatsena, who lives an exile in the forest. The rishi Nārada discloses to her and her father that Satyavant is fated to die within a year. Sāvitri abides by her decision and goes to live in the forest with the husband of her choice. As the year draws to a close she performs austerities, and on the fated day accompanies Satyavant through the forest in search of fruits and fuel. A faintness seizes Satyavant, and Yama, the Death-god, appears. In spite of Sāvitri’s supplications, Yama takes Satyavant’s life in the form of a “thumb-sized man,” (aṅgu-śūkhamātraḥ purusah), and bears it off in his hunter’s net. Sāvitri follows, and by her persistence wins from Yama a number of boons, including the restoration of life to Satyavant. In consequence then of Sāvitri’s devotion, Satyavant is restored to life, Dyumatsena recovers his sight and his kingdom, Aśvapati becomes father of a hundred sons, while Satyavant and Sāvitri also have a hundred sons and live four hundred years.

The first passage quoted is the conversation between Aśvapati, Nārada and Sāvitri, when the latter declares her choice of Satyavant as husband, Vrāṭāka, Benares, 1875, folio 123a4:

² Perhaps read varanyogyaḥ hi.
While the king was thus speaking the lotus-eyed princess returned from the hermitage attended by her aged counsellors, made obeisance to her father’s feet and then reverently saluted the muni. And she was seen by Nārada, who seeing her addressed the Earth-lord. “This maid is like unto the offspring of a god! Why dost thou not offer her in marriage to some suitor, O great-armed? Verily the fair one is ready for a bridegroom.” Thus addressed then by the muni the best of kings spoke to the muni, saying: “Sent forth for this purpose this large-eyed girl has returned, sent forth, the virtuous maid, by me. And by her has a husband been chosen. Do thou ask her, O best of munis.” She was asked by that muni, and the glorious maiden said to him: “In the hermitage lives the son of Dyumatsena, Satyavant by name. That prince has been chosen by my heart as husband.”

nārada uvāca (Vratárka, 123a7):

speaks truthfully, he speaks truthfully himself—he is known therefore as Satyavant, the Truthful. And likewise horses are dear to him. [As a child] he used to play with earthenware horses, and he even drew a horse in a picture, and for this he is called Citraśya, Picture-horse. He is handsome, and virtuous, too, skilled in all the shasters, and no man is to be seen his like in this world. He is himself filled with all virtues as is the great ocean with gems. But there is one great defect overshadowing all his virtues: within a year’s time his life will have run out and he will leave his body.”

Aṣvapati said: “Choose another bridegroom, and may luck befall thee, Śāvitrī—go, now is the season for thy marriage, fair eyed maid.”

Śāvitrī uvāca (Vṛatārka, 123a11):

nānyaṁ icchāmy ahaṁ, tāta, manasāpi varam, prabho,

One should first consider with the heart, afterwards utter with the voice; and after that, action takes its course, whether for good or for ill. How therefore shall I choose another heart and another husband? Kings speak but once, the learned speak but once, and but once are maidens given in marriage—these three things but once! In thinking of a husband, in no way does my mind waver. Whether virtuous

1 Cf. Indische Sprüche 6650 and 6652.
2 This half-sloga is so hard to reduce to order on account of its misplaced conjunctions that the corresponding words at this point in Hemādri’s version may be quoted as a substitute, namely ‘prumāṇam me manas, tāta; kathāṁ cānayaṁ vṛṇomy ahām’—‘My heart is my guide, O father, and how can I choose another?’

even not virtuous, fool or scholar, of long life or of short, he is my husband, my lord! I choose no other as husband, not though he were Çaoîpati!"

The terseness of this Vratārka passage appeals more to the Western reader, at least, than the corresponding drawn-out narrative of the Mahābhārata. The vigor and emphasis of Śāvitrī’s final words in the passage quoted are certainly not approached in the corresponding ālokās of the Epic.

The three versions of the story agree in the main in Nārada’s account of the naming of Satyavant, particularly in the apparently altogether irrelevant account of his name Citrāçva. The ālokās in Hemādri at this point (p. 261)" are as follows:

satyaṁ vadat y asūn rūjā, satyāçvas' tena sa smṛtaḥ.
nityam açvāḥ priyāḥ tasya, karoty açvān sa mṛnmayān, citre 'pi likhayaty' açvān, citrāçvas tena kathyate.

This making, or playing with, earthenware horses on the part of an otherwise heroic prince is explained by the Mahābhārata ālokā, 10870:

bālasyāçvāḥ priyāç cāṣya, karoty açvān ca mṛnmayān, citre' pi vilikhaty açvān; citrāçva iti coeyate.

The fact that this occupation marked the prince’s childhood is assumed to be known in the other two versions. This and the further fact that this entirely irrelevant statement is not omitted in two versions which elsewhere sacrifice so much to brevity would seem to indicate that the tradition looked upon Citrāçva, styled Satyavant, as an historic personage.

The nature of the penances performed by Śāvitrī as the day of her husband’s death approaches is described much more at length in the Mahābhārata than in either of the Purānic versions. The details of this are reserved in the Purānic excerpts for another place in their accounts of the Śāvitrī-vrata. In the account of what took place when Śāvitrī went with Satyavant into the forest on the fateful day, a feature in the Purānic versions which deserves notice is the mention of the banyan tree (vāṭa). The banyan is not so much as named in the Mahābhārata story. In the Vratārka kathā, however, while Satyavant is gathering fruit and fuel, the faithful Svātī takes her seat under a banyan—"vāṭavṛkaññale sādhvī upaviṣṭā mahāsaṃtī." Hemādri's kathā has a similar line, and both of these accounts mention the vāṭa again in speaking of Svātī's return with the soul of Satyavant after her successful interview with Yama. The banyan would seem out of place in a forest described in a preceding line as 'ādruma-sarīkānu,' as it is a tree which tends to grow apart from other trees, forming a small forest in itself.1 But the vāṭa figures prominently in the Svātī rite—which indeed is styled the vāṭasaṃviṭvatā—and hence perhaps is introduced into the story.

The banyan's striking powers of self-perpetuation made it a symbol of fruitfulness to women desiring sons, and hence it is not unnaturally associated with a rite which had the attainment of sons and grandsons as its object.

Without detailing the lengthy moralizing of Svātī and the gradual relenting of Yama, the Vṛata, 124a10, briefly tells what the faithful wife won by her intercession with the Death-god.

sainūsiṣṭas tena vākyena dharmarājo yamas tadā, varāṇam āgyaro dañā varāni tasyai didega ha.
sa pañcādi ātmānaḥ putrān, pitub ṣaṅkaṣataṁ tathā, caṅkṣaḥprāptiṁ ca sa vāre ḍvaṁraṇaḥvaṇurayos tadā;
rājaṃprāptiṁ tathā bhartur, jīvitaṁ ca tathā vibhoḥ (dharmapṛṣṭih svabhur hi); nivṛttaṁ sa sumadhyama, pradakṣiṇāṁ tathaṁ kṛtvā dharmarājaṁ suvratā, ṭathety uktvā dharmarājo jagāma ca svam ālayam.

Then Yama the lord of justice was delighted with this speech, and the generous lord of wishes granted a wish to her. She thereupon then wished sons for herself, and a hundred sons for her father and the gaining of sight for her two parents-in-law; then the gaining of his kingdom for her husband and likewise the life of her lord (for the attainment of virtue was her husband's already). Thereupon the graceful one turned back, after making a respectful salutation to Dharmarāja by turning to him her right side. And Dharmarāja, saying "Be it so," went to his own home.

The five boons won from Yama are the same in the three versions, though stated in different orders. In this passage, and again later, we have it suggested that both Dyumatsena and his wife were blind.

1 Lassen, Indische Alterthumskunde, i. 256.
Sāvitrī returns to the banyan (the vaṭa being mentioned again) and restores life to Satyavant. At this point in the Vṛtārka, Sāvitrī tells Satyavant everything that had happened. In the Mahābhārata, Satyavant does not learn of his death and revival until Sāvitrī makes her disclosures at the end.

In the Mahābhārata also, Dyumatsena receives his sight before starting in search of his son. In the Vṛtārka we have a more pathetic picture of two blind parents being restored to sight while wandering through the forest (124a14).

astāṁ gate tataḥ sūrye dyumatseno mahāpatiḥ putrasyāgamanākāṅkṣā itaṃ cetaça ca dhāvati, ācramād ācramānī gacchan putradarçanakāṅkṣāyā.
“āvayor andhayor yaṣṭiḥ kva gato ’si vināvayoḥ” evaṁ sa vividhāṁ kroṣan sapatniko mahāpatiḥ cakāra duḥkhataṁ taḥ san “putra putreti” cīsakṛt. akasmād eva rājendro labdhacaksur maheṣvaram.

Then when the sun had set the king Dyumatsena ran hither and thither anxious for the return of his son, going from hermitage to hermitage in search of his son. “Where hast thou gone without us, thou staff of this blind pair!”—thus wailing in varied phrase the king together with his wife cried, distressed with grief, “my son, my son!” (Then) by a very miracle the lord of kings received his eyesight.

In passing from the Vṛtārka’s kathā to its account of the rite itself, a great deal is found that is obscure. This obscurity is due in part to our lack of knowledge of things alluded to. But there is much that must have drawn whatever meaning it may have had from the devout imaginations of the worshippers. It conveys very little meaning to one who would apply exact constructions to its syntax or usage of language, and even to one who interprets his grammatical rules with liberality, and allows all possible latitude in charitable patience with disorderly arrangement, there remains an irreducible sediment of bad usage and obscure expression. Obvious corruptions in the kathā do not interfere with a fairly accurate following of the sense, but in the rest of the work passages are found, out of all admissible construction, which do not suggest so readily their probable meaning. These conditions may be due to the fact that the sources of such works as the Caturvarga and the Vṛtārka were mnemonic manuals rather than careful treatises, but most of the blame must fall upon a careless transmission of the text. Without going far beyond necessary limits, this paper cannot discuss difficulties. It must aim only at presenting the significant features of the rite as described, with abundant allowance for correction.

The Vratārka’s account of the rite is divided, with a specious attempt at system, under four heads, the pūjā, kathā, vidhi or vidhāna, and udyāpana. The division is not exact, and there is overlapping and repetition to such an extent that it is hard to state any precise distinction between the different aspects of the ceremony—the kathā of course excepted. The whole is prefaced by about a dozen lines of the lithograph stating the proper season for the ceremony and its purpose. The time is stated in two ghokas, from the Skanda and Bhaviśya Purāṇas, both of which prescribe the full moon of Jyeṣṭha as the proper season. But curiously enough, while the Vratārka specifies Jyeṣṭha, one of its lines (121b14) reading

one of Hemādri’s authorities specifies (p. 269”) the month Bhadrapada in the following ēloka from the Bhaviśyottara Purāṇa:

\[ \text{trayodāśyām bhadrapade dantadhāvanapūrvakam} \]
\[ \text{trirātraṁ niyamaṁ kuryād upāvāsasya bhaktitaḥ.} \]

An assumption of local differences of observance may serve to reconcile this discrepancy. The Vratārka classes this rite under the general heading “atha pūrṇimā-vratāni” and the sub-heading “tatra jyeṣṭha pūrṇimāyāṁ vataśvitrīrātama.” The udyāpanam also mentions Jyeṣṭha. The purpose of the rite is clearly shown to be the attainment of such boons as Sāvitrī in the myth obtained from Yama, chiefly sons and grandsons and the avoidance of the awful curse of a Hindu widowhood. The Vratārka’s words are “nāma bhūtāḥ putrānāṁ ca ayuṛāgrogyaprāptaye janmājanmanī arāudharyaprāptaye ca sāvitrīrātam ahaṁ karisya iti aṅkalpya,” etc., 122a3.

The pūjā contains a number of mantras appropriate to different stages of the ceremony. A few might be quoted. The first, followed by the words “iti dhyānam,” evidently relates to the preparation of the images for the worship. The second relates to the bringing of these to the sacred spot, the village banyan. The third is apparently concerned with the offering of these images, the fourth with preparing water for ablutions. The last seems to have the words which indicate its function partially included within the metrical construction. The first is at 1224.

rinsing (snānam, ācānan) the offering of a garment (vastram) to Sāvitrī, the offering of the sacred cord (itty upavitam), of the fragrant sandal wood, accompanied by saffron, aloes, camphor and rocaṇa, ‘kuṅkumāgarukarpūrakastūrirocanānyutam’ (cand am), the offering of grain (itty akṣuṭāṁ) and of flowers (puś pam). The words in parentheses are those which follow the glokas in the text of the Vratārka. Following these mantras occur under the heading “āthāṅgapājā” a bare outline of what appears later in the udāpanam in metrical form, an adoration of the various members of Brahmā, Satyavant, and the two Sāvitrīs, goddess and woman. This begins “Sāvitrīyāi pādaṁ pūjayaṁi, prasāvitrīyāi jaṅghe, kamulapatrākyāi kaṭim, bhūtatdhāriṇyāi udarum, brahmaṇaḥ priyāyāi śīraḥ pūjayaṁi.” Then offerings are made of incense (dhīṭaṁ) and lights (ḍīpaṁ). The pūja closes with the following invocation (prārthanaṁ, 122b5):

sāvitrī brahmagāyatrī sarvādā priyabhāśiṇī tenā satyena māṁ pāhi duḥkhasaṃśasūrasaṅgarat.
tvam gāurī, tvain śucir gāurī, tvam prabhā candramāṇḍale, tvam eva ca jagannāti, tvam uddhara, varānane.
yan mayā duṣkṛtaṁ sarvaṁ kṛtaṁ janmaḥ ātitaṁ, śivasāmbhavatu tat sarvam, avāidhavyaṁ ca dehi me.

1 Probably intended for sātyavatāṁ.
In the püjā we notice how the characters in the story are brought into the ceremony. Yama, also called Dharmarāja and Sureśvara, stands alone, Sāvitrī the woman appears with Satyavant, while Sāvitrī the goddess introduces her divine consort Brahmā who does not appear in the story at all. Sāvitrī the goddess is variously called Prasāvitrī, Lokamātā, Jagannātā, Devamātā and even Vedamātā and Gāyatrī.

Following the kathā, which in the Vratārka comes after the püjā, is found the vidhi, or vidhānam. The sources of the püjā are nowhere clearly indicated. The vidhānam, however, is from the Skanda Purāṇa, forming a continuation of the narrative of the kathā. It seems to give an outline of the conduct of the ceremony which the udyāpanam subsequently describes in more particularity. The kathā which Hemādri quotes from the Bhaviṣyottara Purāṇa has a similar epilogue, in which the vidhānam is given, but of course in somewhat different language.

All that seems essential in the so-called vidhānam is repeated in the udyāpanam. This, as its name signifies, gives directions for carrying out the ceremony, for “making it go.” Here the Vratārka and Hemādri use the same source, the Skanda Purāṇa. In 55 ślokas of these parallel versions there are over 80 points at which Hemādri gives different readings, ranging from a particle to a whole line. The weak spots in such texts are hardly worth patching into intelligibility, but, so far as reasonable reliance can be placed in the sense of the text as found, the udyāpanam’s prescriptions will be given.

In the first place, the woman who is to perform the ceremony passes the twelfth of the lunar month in Jyeṣṭha eating little (laghubhūk), and then, after a cleansing of the teeth, undertakes a three-days’ fast with the following niyama-mantra, 125a9:

trirātāna lañghhayitvā ca caturthe divase tv aham, candrayārgham pradātavā ca pūjayitvā tu tām satīm, miṣṭāmnāni yathāṣaktī bhōjayitvā dvijottamān, bhokṣye ṭhaṁ tu; jagaddhātrī, nirvighnau kuru me, ṣūbhe.

After passing three nights fasting, on the fourth day, giving an offering to the moon and worshipping the virtuous goddess, entertaining the Brāhmans to the extent of my ability with dainty foods, I shall eat, O thou that dost support the earth; do thou occasion freedom from obstacles for me, O fair one.
In translating here I have ventured to express the connotation of fasting ("skipping" meals) which must here be prominent in laṅghayitvā. The rather unruly conjunctions ca, hi and tu are used here in a manner most characteristic of this text.

Then a prastha of sand (bālukaprastham) or else grain of seven kinds (saptadāṁya) is put in a bamboo vessel. This is to be wrapped with cloths; and upon it is set an image of Śāvitrī, the goddess, with Brahmā, and another of Śāvitrī, the woman, with Satyavant. These are to be made of gold according to the udyāpanam, of silver according to the Vratārka’s vidhānam, or, according to the vidhānam in Hemādri, of either gold, silver, or earthenware, as the ability of the devotee permits. Also a basket and an axe of silver are to be made, and in one of the versions a bundle of faggots as well, and a “well-spread banyan tree,” are prescribed, reminiscences of the visit to the forest in the story. The three-days’ fast is then to be undergone under a banyan in the presence of the images.

The banyan is as essential to the ceremony as the worshipful heroine herself. Each Indian village had its banyan, forming a ready-made series of temples for its idols and sacrifices. A ceremony concerned with the banyan which might conceivably have been something similar to our Śāvitrī rite is mentioned in connection with the attainment of enlightenment by the Future Buddha. See Warren, Buddhism in Translations, p. 71. “Now at that time there lived in Uruvelā a girl named Sujātā . . . . . On reaching maturity she made a prayer to a certain banyan tree, saying, ‘If I get a husband of equal rank with myself, and my first-born is a son, I will make a yearly offering to you of the value of a hundred thousand pieces of money.’ And her prayer had been successful.” In this Śāvitrī rite the banyan is the object of particular attention.

Following the preceding, the next step in the udyāpanam is thus given, Hemādri, p. 274:

vartulam maṇḍalāṁ kāryaṁ gomayena, tapodhana pañcātmreṇa snapanaṁ gandhapurāṇena ca.
candanaṅgurukarpūrāṁ mālyavastravibhūṣaṇaiḥ sampūjya tatra śāvitrīṁ maṇḍale sthāpayet tataḥ piṭapīṣena padmaṁ ca candanaṅtha vā likhet nyāaye cāiva tato deviṁ kamale kamalāsanāṁ;
anena vidhiṁ śthāpya pūjayed gatamatsarā

1 Lassen, Indische Alterthumskunde, i. 259.
A round ring is to be made with cow dung, and the images washed with the pāṇḍāmrtam (milk, coagulated milk, butter, honey, and sugar) and with water containing perfume and flowners. Worshipping with sandalwood, aloes and camphor and with ornaments of garlands and garments, the devotee should then place Sāvitrī there in the ring. And she should outline a lotus with yellow meal, or else with sandal-dust, and should then place the goddess whose seat is a lotus within the lotus. Placing her in this manner she should worship without selfish thought.

In the above citation Hemādri has been quoted. Although the Vṛtārka follows the same source, as has been said, it here omits two lines, the fourth and sixth, and has a less satisfactory line for the seventh.

There now follows the aṅgapūjā alluded to above. The various limbs and members, feet, knees, thighs, waist, breast, neck, face and head, of Sāvitrī and of Brahmā and Satyavant, are saluted with ‘nāmas’ and ‘pūjā.’ Yama does not partake of this, apparently. Offerings are now made, with appropriate argha-mantras, to Sāvitrī, Brahmā and Satyavant, and Yama. The first of these mantras is here given as a sample of the lot, 125b2:

ōṁkārapūrvakaṁ, devi, viṇāpūrakadhārīni, veḍāmātār, nāmas te ‘stu!’ avāñdhavyam prayaccha me.
pattivrate, mahābhāge, vahniḻāte, svacismite, dṛghavrate, dṛghamate, bhartuṣ ca priyavadini, avāñdhavyam ca sāubhāgyaṁ dehi tvam mama, suvrate, putrān pāuṭrāṇa ca sāukhyam ca. gṛhāṁ grhaṁ, namo namaḥ.

The nature of the argham is indicated in a śloka further on:
gandhapuṣpaṁiḥ sanāivedyāṁiḥ phalaṁ kusumaḍīpakāṁ rakta-varastrān ālayāṁraṁiḥ pūjayed gata-matsaraḥ.

The prescriptions for the three-days’ fast conclude with supplications, prārthanā-mantras, addressed to Sāvitrī, Brahmā and Satyavant, and Yama. The first of these is not substantially different from that quoted in speaking of the pūjā. The others are similar in character, 125b7:

brahma-satyavatoḥ prārthanāmantraḥ.
avivyogaḥ yathā deva sāvitrīyā sabitas tava avivyogas tathāsāmekam bhūyāj janmānī janmani.
yampārārthānāmantraḥ.

The last night is spent in vigil (jāgaram) with ceremonial songs, dances and the like (gūntētādimaṅgalās). This section concludes, 125b11:

sā tiṣṭhē ca divā rātrāu kāmakrodhavivarjītā;
dinatraye 'pi kartavyam evam arghādipūjanam.

On the fourth day the priesthood receives attention, and generous gifts. The following ċlokas should really be quoted as showing how the ācāraya profited by this rite (125b12):

The rest of the udyāpanam contains directions for attentions to the sacred vaṭa and for more gifts to the guru and his wife. The whole is concluded with the following glokas, 126aś:

Thus we may leave the Vratārka and its companion the Caturvargacintāmaṇī. What we have found there on this subject, one might almost be justified in calling utter nonsense. Still something may be had from an excursion into a lower stratum of Indian literature. (Could the Vratārka and Hemādri’s work possibly be called literature?) One finds in the jargon of these superstitious rites the same burden of human ignorance, the destruction of which is ever the object of human effort. Instead of the courts of kings and the marvelous deeds of heroes and demi-gods, instead of the intricate philosophy and elaborated wisdom to be found in more noble works of Hindu genius, we are shown here by the faulty phrases of the Vratārka the humble village, with its spreading banyan tree near by, and we are able to touch at one small and to us insignificant point the life of the people whose millions still populate India.
Vohumanah in the Gāthas.—By Lawrence H. Mills, Professor in the University of Oxford.

In examining the passages in which Vohumanah occurs I will classify them in the following manner. First of all I will reproduce those in which the words indicate the beneficent disposition of the Deity as his attribute; secondly, those which treat this attribute as personified; thirdly, those which express the analogous subjective quality in the accredited citizen of the Zarathushtrian Commonwealth; fourthly, this characteristic as embodied in the individual believer (so, rather than as ‘embodied in the entire community,’ for the reason that asha was the concept generally used to represent the Community, although it is possible that vohumanah may be also occasionally applied in this last sense). In Y. 28, 6: vohū gaiṭī manaiḥā, daidī aśā-dāo dare-gāyā1 we have vohumanah the good mind as the attribute of God. ‘Come with thy good mind and give to us asha gifts,’ this hardly means ‘come in company of Vohumanah as the Archangel,’ but ‘come with thy benevolence to give’ is the more immediate idea. At Y. 31, 17: zāi nē mażdā ahurā vaiehēuś fradaḥkēśā manaiḥā, the meaning as it lies before us in the text sways between ‘be thou the enlightener of the good man v. m.,’ or ‘be thou the revealer of thy good mind.’ In Y. 32, 2: aĉībyō mażdāo ahurō sāremnō vohū manaiḥā . . . paiti-mraoṭ, Ahura ‘answers with his good mind’ evidently meaning, ‘as actuated by his sane benevolence’ as his attribute. In Y. 32, 6: hāṭā-marāṇē ahurā vāhiśā vōistā manaiḥā, it is with his divine attribute v. m., that is to say, with his sane benevolence that he knew the essential truths, holding them in memory; so in Y. 33, 10: vohū ukhšyād manaiḥā . . . tanūm, the divine benevolence is indicated: ‘cause our person to grow in prosperity through v. m.’ So in Y. 33, 12: dāsvā . . . v. m. fšeratām.* (In Y. 33, 13 the personification seems to be the more prominent phase of the idea.)

1 All the various views of these several passages worth recording are to be found in text or in alternatives in my Five Zarathushtrian Gāthas, pp. 650, Leipzig, 1892-94; also in Vol. III, a Dictionary of the Gāthic Language of the Zend Avesta, in the course of publication (section by section).
In Y. 34, 6 I now more decidedly prefer 'if ye are thus really endowed with justice (așā) and with benevolence,' and I would so correct the passage on Asha in other parts of this Journal.

In Y. 34, 15: mazāta mādi . . . vaocā . . . tā tā vohā manaηaḥ, Ahura is besought 'speak thou forth with the good mind,' here without doubt, the divine characteristic is exclusively indicated; and exclusion of the cognate ideas is not usual. In Y. 44, 1 we have probably 'with benevolence,' v. jimat m. So in Y. 44, 6: tuēbyō khēathren vohā cīnas manaηaḥ. 'To these may'st thou assign the kingdom through thy divine benevolence' is better than to render 'by the help of the holy saint,' 'the Citizen par eminence v. m., i. e., the Monarch.' So in Y. 45, 10: kvaṭ hōi . . . vohēcī vōiṣt manaηaḥ, 'since with his justice and his supreme benevolence (good mind) he has assigned weal and the deathless life' . . .

In Y. 46, 10, the benevolence (v. m.) might be that of Ahura but I think the character of the reigning government seems more naturally alluded to. In Y. 46, 12: at īś vohā hēṃ aibī mōist manaηaḥ, in case we are not able to render 'yea, those he shall mingle with his own, holy people vohā manaηaḥ' (as embodied in Ilīs church), and I fear this would be difficult; then we have 'God meeting them with his divine benevolence' (hardly 'in company with Vohumanah his Archangel').

So in Y. 46, 13: . . . guēthdō vohā frādāt manaηaḥ, it seems to be Ahura who 'furthers the settlement animated by his divine benevolence, his good mind.' That he would 'further them with his good citizen,' the 'representative good-minded man' is not so likely, if for no other reason, then because it was the citizen himself who was to be helped. In Y. 46, 14 'the hymns of Vohumanah' may refer to the Archangel, but see elsewhere. (In Y. 47, 1: speētā mainyā vahīṣēcī manaηaḥ . . . , 'with thy best mind' (as the divine attribute) 'is especially introduced, as it is a strophe of divine counsels, but the rhetorical personification may be included.) If the one like Thee at Y. 48, 3: thēvās* mazād vahīṣē khratvē manaηaḥ is, as in Y. 44, 1: mazād frēdī thēvās sāhdyā maṇavē, equivalent to 'Thyself, we should have an instance of vohā manaηaḥ as expressing the attribute of benevolence which characterises Ahura's wisdom. In Y. 49, 1: ahyō vohā aōḥō vīṇā manaηaḥ, we may say that Ahura is besought to 'bestow (sic) the destruction of the Beōdva, animated by his benevolence (toward his oppressed saints in their military disaster).' Y. 49, 12 most belongs here (see below). If Y. 50, 7, c.: ať vě yaojā zevitvāŋ avavtā v refers to Ahura (so reading yaojā), then he is besought 'to yoke on his mighty steeds in accordance with and animated by his benevolence' (so alternatively; but see elsewhere).

In Y. 50, 11: dātā aṅhēuṇ arodā vohū manaṅhá, the 'Creator of the world, or giver of life, is besought to grant help through his good mind' which immediately suggests the divine attribute. In Y. 51, 2: ... khāṭhrem khāṁakem vohū manaṅhá vahmāi dādāī savanīh, we have the undoubted action of Ahura, who is besought to 'bestow the possession of power ītiśi (animated) by his good mind.' In Y. 51, 7: dādāi mōi ... mazdā lēviśi utayatī mananīh vohū sēnhē, Ahura is besought to grant the eternal two, Health and Deathlessness (as revealed) in his doctrine through his divine benevolence v. m.' Perhaps vohū mananīh in Y. 51, 15: hyat mizhīdm z ... garō demāṅg ahurō mazdāo jasat pourvyō tā vē vohū mananīh ... savāiś cīviśi as the one by whom 'Ahura's reward is given' might possibly belong rather to the concept of personification; cp. vd. 19. 31 (102) where 'Vohumanah arises before the throne.' But where 'giving' is the main thought to be qualified, there the 'benevolence' is peculiarly prominent. In Y. 51, 21: vohū khāṭhrem mananīh mazdāo dādāt ahurō, Ahura is literally asked 'to grant the kingdom through his benevolence' not, of course, 'by means of the good citizen,' not even though the citizen meant was the good-minded man par eminence, since it is the citizen who is to be the recipient of the benefit.

As to this see Y. 28, 3, 5, 8(?), 10(?).

In the asha section Y. 29, vohū manah occurs only three times. In Y. 29, 11: kudā aḵem vohucā manō khāṭhremcā ... xehen or 'together' were asha v. m. and kh. fastening together ... with v. m. and kh.' the terms designate the personified attribute. In Y. 30, 1: ... saotācā ahurō yeṣu(i)yācā vahhēuṇ mananīhō, the words 'yasnas of Vohumanah' refer to the person or personification; so in Y. 30, 7: ahmāicā khāṭhrā jasat mananīhō vohū aṣōcā ... an advent of some divine power is announced; he comes 'with Khshathra and Vohumanah', well possibly, though not certainly, as personified (if it be Ahura who ‘came’ or of whom it is besought ‘let him come,’ then ‘with his benevolence’ would be indicated). The ‘good abode’ (objectivised amenity) of the Good Mind at Y. 30, 10: at āsīthā yaozānē tā hūītōth vānēhēs manāhā, carries with it the same concept of personification. In Y. 31, 6: mazdā vaat khāthrem hyāt hōī vohā vakhšāt manāhā, ‘let the kingdom (khshathra) be to Mazda such as may flourish through the instrumentality of the guardian spirit the personified Benevolence.’ So in Y. 32, 4: vakhšātē daēvō-zaētā vānēhēs sīzhēyamā manāhā: on account of the following Ahurahyā and of Ashāateca the ‘evil man’ is perhaps better understood as ‘deserted by the Archangel V. M.’ than ‘by the human believer.’ That ‘good men would leave him’ is a little too commonplace here. So in Y. 32, 15: tōī ābyā bairīsōtē vānēhēs ā demāntē manāhā, we have: let the chief be ‘borne by the two (Weal and Deathlessness) to the home of the Good Mind (as the personified attribute).’ Then comes in the valuable Y. 33, 11: yē śīriō* ahūrō mazdōsē ... manasē vohā ... where personification is so pronounced as to give occasion for the expressions ‘hear’ and ‘come.’

In the next verse, Y. 33, 12, the personification (in the sociative) is not our first impression.

In Y. 33, 13 we have the ‘āshī of Vohumanah’ more probably the ‘blest-reward given by v. m.’ as the personification. So at Y. 34, 3: gaēthō ... yāō v. thrōōtā manāhā, V. M. is the Archangel. (As to Y. 34, 5, we cannot be so sure that the composer wishes to be ‘God’s own together with the personified Archangel?’ which seems strained. Also in Y. 34, 6 it is doubtful whether we have the person in ‘if ye are really thus, O Asha and with the Good Mind; better as elsewhere: ‘if ye are really endowed with justice and benevolence.’) But in Y. 34, 7: vānēhēś vaēḥēnē manāhā I think ‘known of the Good Mind (as the Archangelic person),’ or ‘knowing his lore’ is the best rendering; ‘known of good men’ seems more doubtful.

We may say the same perhaps of the ‘far-abiding Vohumanah’ in Y. 34, 8: yōī nōī uōm mainyānīdī aēhgyō dāirē vohā as manō (yet see the alternative ‘the estranged church member’). So in Y. 34, 11: vānēhēś khāthṛā manāhā, the Archangel seems in so far to possess personality, as to be endowed with the Kingly Power. Yet many would stoutly claim that vohumanah here represents the disciple.
But the ‘paths of vohumanah’ in Y. 34, 12: sīhā nāo aēg patho vanhēūha nāṣēng mananīhā, may better be those of the good minded (man). So also of ‘his way’ in Y. 34, 13: tēm aēdānem ahrūrd yēm mōi mraoī vanhēūha mananīhā. So in Y. 34, 14: v. syaothnā ō. of ‘his actions’; in all these occurrences the ‘good disciple’ may be meant. In Y. 43, 2: v. māyādo, m., the wonderful truths ‘of the Good Mind’ may well imply personification. So perhaps the might of the Good Mind’ (Y. 43, 4): v. haē jimaṭ m., implies at least a poetical personification (but the meaning ‘might of the good men’ also suggests itself). In Y. 43, 6: jasū m.... v. m., where Ahura ‘comes with Vohumanah,’ i.e. ‘with the Good Mind’ (associative), the terms possibly express the personification, yet the attribute lies very near. So in Y. 44, 1 (as to which see above), ‘that he may come with Vohumanah’ seems hardly so probable as ‘that he (?) may come “auspiciously.”’

In Y. 44, 9, ‘dwelling in the same abode with Vohumanah’ implies of course poetical personification, but it may refer ‘to the saint.’ In Y. 46, 7: anyēm thvāhmāt āthrasēcā mananīhāscā, ‘Whom have I but thee and thy mind’ (referring probably to Vohumanah), implies the personification of the latter. (In Y. 46, 10: vohā khēthre m mananīhā, ‘the realm’; some might say, ‘the land’ with Vohumanah, might imply the idea of the ‘Archangel,’ but the government ‘by the good man’ seems more natural. In Y. 47, 1: vahiśtācā m... ahamā dān... mazdāo... the personality of the Archangel is only rhetorically, if at all, intentionally expressed: the significance of the subjective meaning (attribute) is strongly present.)

In Y. 48, 6: hā... dāt tēviśim v. m. herekhaḥc (= -yānu.) (so reading), ‘the blessed and continuous might of Vohumanah’ (see Gāthas, pp. 292, 572), may well imply the person of the Archangel; but see elsewhere. *c is false; yā, lost nasalization. In Y. 48, 7: yōiā v. m. didragzhōduēc (so, not ‘diyuē,’ which is no rational reading), ‘ye who desire to hold fast by the Good Mind,’ or ‘to abide by him,’ shows the concept of personification as our more immediate impression, so perhaps in Y. 48, 9, v. vaśū m.

(In Y. 49, 3: tā v. sarē izyāi m., ‘I seek for the protecting headship of Vohumanah,’ hardly belongs here.)

In 49, 5: yē daēnām v. sārēdā m., ‘the protector of the faith may act either through a good mind as inspired within himself by the Deity,' or 'with the help of the subdeity Vohumanah.' (Whether in Y. 49, 12: kaṭ tōi . . . avañhō Z., kaṭ tōi v.m., the instrumental refers more immediately to the Archangel or to the attribute is doubtful. 'Hast thou, O Ahura, help for Z. (thou, O Ahura, acting) with thy divine benevolence,' this seems the most natural; see Ahura below. We can hardly make out a case for an instr. (for nominative) with subject understood (inherent as it were) 'thou-with-good-mind' (this as all included within the two words V. M. in the instr. case; see Gāthas, p. 322, for alternative).
In Y. 50, 1: kē mē nā . . . anyō . . . v. m. we have the personification in a full form (of course), 'whom have I as deliverer but the Best Mind.' (Not so certainly by any means in Y. 50, 4, possibly: 'Thus praising I will sacrifice to you with Asha and the Best Mind.' But see elsewhere where 'with the ritual and the best intention' is suggested.) In Y. 51, 16 the metric 'feet of the Good Mind' may possibly mean more immediately of the good man, par-eminence 'the prophet;' but it is impossible to shut out the thought of 'the Archangel.' The kingdom of the Good Mind as the personified attribute at Y. 51, 18, is certainly more natural than the 'government of benevolence' (in the abstract); but if the good mind here referred to the 'good-mined Citizen par-eminence, the Head of the State,' the interpretation would look very natural; see below, p. 75 f. In Y.
51, 20: tut vē nē hazaoṣdōukō vispōkō dāidyāi savō aṣem vohū manoḥā . . . the concept of the personified attribute is of course the immediate subject. In Y. 53, 3: v. paityāstēm (so reading) m. we have an interesting uncertainty; each of the three or four related ideas is possible 'the support of the Good Mind,' might at first sight seem more definitely personal, in reference to 'man.' 'May Ahura give thee (thy bridegroom) the (to thee) good-minded-one (par-eminence) as the help of a good man; see 'Asha' following, and we may also well (?) say: 'as a support of thy good mind within thee'; or 'of the law of God's benevolence (which sustains thine entire life'). But 'as the servant of the personified attribute' is probable on account of the following and 'of Mazda,' related ideas. But in Y. 53, 4 . . . m. v. hēnvaṭ kañhū . . . 'the bright' (or 'beatifying') blessing of the Good Mind' would more naturally recall to most of us first of all the Archangel or subdeity).
Vohumanah as the approved mental disposition of the orthodox citizen.

In Y. 28, 2: *yē vādā mazādā ahūrā pairi-jāsāt vohā manaṁhā,* 'I will compass (your altar) with a good mind' refers to a devout disposition in the worshipper. In Y. 28, 4: yē ruvānem (so) mēn gairī vohā dādē hāthrā manaṁhā, 'I... will devote my mind to... watchfulness, (to praise, or to the Mount (-im* of Heaven)) ever with a good mind' refers to a devotional frame. In Y. 30, 2...* vahišṭā devānātā sūcā manaṁhā...* 'behold the flames with the best disposition of mind,' refers to the same. (In Y. 30, 10,... ā hūṣitāt vaṁheuš manaṁhō... 'in the good abode (the particularised amenity) of a good mind,' as meaning 'where mental goodness reigns' is only the included idea (see above)). In Y. 31, 4...* vahišṭā išātā manaṁhā...* 'I will pray with the best mind,' needs no explanation. In Y. 31, 5: vīdevi vohā manaṁhā...* 'for my knowing with a good mind' is also clear. In Y. 32, 11: yōt vahišṭāt asūrūnā m., rāreṣyān manaṁhō, 'who keep back the saints from the best mind' refers most probably to subjective characteristics, yet some might prefer 'from the company of the faithful.' So in Y. 32, 12, *'who keep men by their doctrine from the best deed' refers to personal religious characteristics.

(If would, therefore, be forced at Y. 32, 11, to say 'who keep men back from association with the good-minded man', 'tempting them to bad company.') In Y. 33, 7: dar(e)ṣatō aśā vohā manaṁhā yā sruvē (so) parē magānumā, 'let him see how I am listened to with fidelity, and with vohā manaṁhā,' that is to say, 'with a good disposition of mind.' In Y. 33, 8...* yā v. svaṭi m.,* 'that with good mind I may approach to further them,' refers to the mental attitude of the worshipper. In Y. 33, 9: vahišṭā baretā manaṁhā, 'let (one(?)) bear on... with the best mind' refers to the mental disposition.

In Y. 34, 5: vohā m. thrāyōidyā drigām yāṁmākem, 'with Asha and vohumanah to nurture your poor,' refers to the same. In Y. 34, 10: ahyā v. m. svaṭhād, refers to the general tone of benevolence in the Religion. In Y. 43, 1 we can hardly render 'riches, best rewards, the preservation of our chieftain's life'; this last for the 'life of the good mind.' A more obvious idea would be, 'the life of the good-minded saint'; but why not 'of a good disposition'? (In Y. 43, 7, 9, 11, 13, 15: hyaṭ mā v. pairi-jāsāt m. 'that he may come to me endowed with the good mind,' so read, may well refer to the subjective characteristic; but many would prefer (with me at present) to say 'that he may come to me in company with the good man,' i.e. that the ally (Sraoshā) might come with the representative citizen (see the place also treated elsewhere, especially in my new edition.)

So in Y. 44, 1: yathā nē ā vohā jimaṭ m., ‘that he characteristically endowed with the good mind may come to us,’ would be better than if the words were taken merely to qualify the mental disposition of a human ‘approacher’ at the given moment.

In Y. 44, 8 we have yācā v. ukhāhā fraṣi manaṁhā, ‘the hymns which I asked for with a good intention of mind.’ In Y. 44, 16: aṭ hāi vohā sraoṣṭ raṁta manaṁhā, one would say at first sight that we have ‘then come the obedient with good disposition to him to whomsoever...’ referring to the immediate disposition of the one expected to approach (yet compare Y. 43, 7, 9, etc., above. We might decide on ‘then come the loyal ally with the good citizen.’) In Y. 45, 6: yeḥyā vaḥmē vohā fraṣi manaṁhā, ‘in praise of whom I asked questions (as in Y. 44) with a good intention’ is sufficiently plain.

In Y. 46, 3: kaṭiḥyā āṭhāi v. jimaṭ manaṁhā, ‘to whom for aid shall he endowed with the good disposition come’ is of course better than ‘in company with the good man.’ In Y. 48, 9, e.: iṣṭiṣi mā tāā tōi v. m., ‘that they may seek as mine from thee with good disposition of mind’ is better than ‘in company with the orthodox saint’ (see Gāthas for alternative).

So in Y. 46, 10...: ṛṣṇh ahāi v. kūṭṭhrem manaṁhā... ‘an ashi to asha’ (see elsewhere), that is to say ‘a reward to a servant of the community,’ and ‘the sovereign power with a good disposition’ is the natural rendering; (‘in company with the good-minded one as a typical saint,’ would be forced (‘by him’ would be possible. (Not so surely in Y. 46, 14: tēṅg zbyād vauhāhā ukhāhāvī manaṁhā, ‘with the hymns of a good and devout disposition’ would be a little too ‘searching’ to be natural here; but ‘with the hymns devoted to the Archangel,’ and ‘with the hymns of the individual believer,’ the ‘inspired Rishi’ are each possible.)

In Y. 46, 18: māhyāo iṣṭiṣi v. vōišem manaṁhā, ‘I impart or “assign” of my wealth with a good mind’ needs no comment.

In Y. 48, 12: yōī khāṇhām v. manaṁhā hacoṭā, ‘who prosecute thy worship with a good disposition of mind’ seems natural enough. Some would hold Y. 48, 2 e.: navā-i v. navā frowsī frasād manaṁhā... to mean ‘nor has he asked questions with sincerity,' but 'nor has he taken counsel with the good man' is more striking.

In Y. 49, 5: \textit{yē daēnām v. sārīdā manañhā}, we may well have (among the other views) 'who has guarded the Faith with a good disposition of mind,' see the alternatives elsewhere (but hardly here 'in company with either Vohumanah, the Archangel,' or 'in company with' the good citizen').

In Y. 50, 4: \textit{at vād vayāśi stavas mazādē akurā... vahiṣṭācā m.}, we have 'so would I worship with ashā, the ritual, and with vahiṣṭā manañhā, the best disposition.'

In Y. 50, 6: \ldots mahād rāzēng v. sāhīt manañhā... 'may he proclaim my decrees with a good disposition of mind' is the natural rendering.

In Y. 50, 7: \textit{at vē yuojā... ugrēng v. manañhā} (if the first person is preferred as expressed by \textit{yuojā}), we have 'with a good disposition of mind.' (If the 2d sg. imperative is present, the passage belongs above under vohumanah as the divine attribute; see above).

'The good mind' as the 'good man' in whom the 'good mind' rules as the spiritual law of his being; and this as a quasi technical expression for the orthodox citizen.

In Y. 28, 1: \textit{v. m.} should be taken in this sense.

In Y. 28, 7: \textit{vaughēs āyaṃtā m.}, should refer to 'the attained prizes of the good-minded' (see below); (but many would prefer the prizes offered by the Archangel).

In Y. 28, 8: \textit{yavīyancā yī raṇhāhōi vispāi yavē v. manañhō, 'for the ages of the Good Mind,' seems to me to give, as its first impression the idea, of the 'dispensation,' or 'continued existence of the 'church' much in that same sense present when the term 'asha' refers to the 'holy community.'

So in Y. 28, 11: \textit{yē diē aśem nipāōhe manañcā vohē yavaḥ-tātē}, the 'good mind' represents the 'good man' in his citizenship in the Holy State, for the prophet is 'appointed (set) to protect him.' ('To protect the law' is an idea more familiar to us, but hardly the first impression which an expert would get from the passage.)

(In Y. 30, 10, which is elsewhere touched upon, the 'good mind' would not so immediately refer to the 'good-minded man'.)

One might hesitate at Y. 31, 8: \textit{mazādē avaṭ khōṣthrem hyaṭ hōi vohē vakhṣat manañhā}, for an abstract term in the instrumental case makes it doubtful that the human subject could be indicated in the passage. The instrumental case naturally suggests cooperation in the form of ‘help,’ whereas the faithful disciple is everywhere before us as the typical supplicator for help and its conditional recipient. But at Y. 31, 7, the personality v. m. as the good man is in evidence; and it is also possible at Y. 31, 8, 31, 10 and 31, 17: but see also the others cited below.

At Y. 31, 21: muzaďō dādāt aḥurō ... vañheūs vażdvarē manaihō, we again prefer the ‘good citizen.’

(In Y. 32, 4, elsewhere more fully touched upon ‘departing from the good mind’ might refer to the ‘good-minded man’ (departing from the company of the faithful: but this is not preferred)).

In Y. 32, 15, ‘the abode of the good-minded saint’ does not seem to be exclusively the meaning, or the most immediate one, while in Y. 33, 7, ‘the good-minded citizen’ is only remotely possible; ‘let one see how I am listened to by the individual citizen (?) (vohā manaihā), and by the congregation (? aḥā);’ better as elsewhere (see above). In Y. 33, 13, and in Y. 34, 8, ‘the faithful’ is only a possible rendering (see under the Personification). But in Y. 34, 12, ‘the paths of the good mind,’ refer as much to the ‘good-minded man’ as to the Archangel who points out the way. So in Y. 34, 13, ‘the way of the good-minded man’ is more naturally meant.

In Y. 43, 1: rāyo aṣiḥ vañheūs gayem* (not gaṛm, that word is impossible) manaihō, I can well imagine some writers (who might wish to push realism to the extreme) rendering ‘(give me) the life of the good mind,’ that is to say, ‘preserve to me the life of our venerated chief.’ Yet this would seem much strained in such a piece as Y. 43. But in the recurring passages Y. 43, 7, 9, 13, 15, ‘when ... came to me with the good mind,’ we might well understand ‘Śraoša’ (from strophe 12), as the especially ‘obedient’ disciple, the ‘harmonized ally’ coming ‘with the orthodox citizen’ v. m. for he, the subject, whoever he may have been, came (or was to come) as a ‘person,’ and asked a question. Or this v. manaihā may be an instrumental with an inherent nominative ‘when the-one-endowed with the good mind came to me.’

In Y. 44, 4: kasūṛ vañheūs muzaďā dāmiś manaihō, vohumah, as I now hold, is obviously used to represent the good-minded human being as the principal object in the creation (with the earth, sky, rivers, trees, winds and clouds, mentioned in the apex of the immediate connection).
In Y. 44, 9: *hademói ašā vohuca syäs mananihd, the idea of the ‘good-minded man’ is subordinate to that of the divine Personification (‘dwellings with asha’ (as the community) and with v. m. (as the individual saint) would seem far-fetched. But in Y. 44, 13, the *frasyā vaihēuś cākhnarē mananihô, the idea of the faithful may well be present, ‘nor have they loved the inquiries and counsels of the good-minded man.’

In Y. 44, 16: *aś hōi vohū sraosā jañtā mananihā, ‘let Sraosha come with Vohumanah’ may mean (as in Y. 43, 7, 9, etc.), ‘let the loyal ally (the especially heedful or obedient one) come with the regular citizen’ (see above).

In Y. 45, 4: *ptorēm vaihēuś var(e)zayañtō mananihō, ‘the father of the toiling good mind’ refers to the ‘good-minded citizen.’ In Y. 45, 9, I think we have ‘from the nobility of the good-minded one.’

In Y. 46, 2: *ākheō vaihēuś ašā tēśim m., ‘reveal the riches of the good mind’ had better be rendered ‘of the good-minded man’; so also if ‘hear the prayer of the good-minded’ is preferred. The subjective abstract might be present, ‘the riches of a good mind’?, ‘the prayer of a good mind’; but the more realistic concept is always to be chosen where it is at all possible.

In Y. 46, 16: *yatrah vaihēuś mananihō ištā khaśathrem (so here preferred; (‘khaśathrā’ in the Gāthas, p. 268)) the good-minded person is possible (reading khaśathrem) ‘where the kingdom is in the possession of the good man’ (not, if we accept khaśathrā).

In Y. 47, 2: *hīzā ukhāṅćiś vaihēuś . . . mananihō, ‘from the tongue of the good-minded saint’ is meant (some particularly eminent individual Rāhi, among the group of representatives).

In Y. 48, 6: *hā . . ., dāt tēśim vaihēuś mananihō, the ‘continuous strength of the good-minded saint’ may be the meaning.

(In Y. 48, 8, the ‘grace of the good-mind’ might be meant ‘equalling the good-minded (man);’ but as the princely prophet is mentioned as the ‘recipient’ in the next line we should understand an especial saintly person or the Archangel.)

In Y. 48, 11: *kēng ă v. jīmāt mananihō cistiś, ‘the cisti (sagacity) of a good-minded man (some preeminent military chief) might be meant; but (‘cisti inspired by) the Archangel’ seems on the whole better just here.

In Y. 49, 2: *națdā v. . . . fraštā mananihā, we may have ‘nor had he questioned (held counsel) with the good man’ (if so, it refers emphatically to some one of the princely group).
In Y. 49, 3: tā vaṁśeṣa sarē izyādi manauḥḥo... 'therefore I will seek the sheltering-authority of the good-minded (one, the representative saint or priestly prince)' might stand..

In Y. 49, 10: tat ca thraṃśa ṛṭāṁ nipdoṇhē mano vohā uruṇascā aṣāṇnām, we have the signal case for the Gāthas, where vohumanah occurs in antithesis with 'the souls of saints'; that is to say 'the good man now living and the souls of the saintly departed.'

In Y. 49, 12, it would be strained to say 'what help is there to Thee from the congregation (āshā) and from the good man' vohā manauḥḥa.

In Y. 50, 9: aśā vaṁśeṣa sruṭhnāśi manauḥḥo, we have 'with ritual and deeds (ceremonies?, but see the Ved.) of the good-minded man.'

In Y. 51, 3: hiṣūd ukhādāṁ vaṁśeṣa manauḥḥo, 'hymns(?) from the tongue of the good-minded (man, some eminent princely priest),' is the immediate idea intended by the composer to be conveyed.

In Y. 51, 11: kē ṛā vaṁśeṣa manauḥḥo acistā magāi ereśvoc...? we should first say 'who hath cared for the maga of the good man, the leading saint'; but the Archangel is likewise suggested.

In Y. 51, 16: vaṁśeṣa paṇdeṭiś manauḥḥo, possibly 'with the metric feet of the saintly prophet (vohumanah),' but 'of the Archangel' would not be bad (metres used in chanting hymns addressed to him, see above).

(In Y. 51, 18: khaṭṭham manauḥḥo vaṁśeṣa vidda, 'the Realm of the good mind' may well have been understood as 'of the good man,' referring to the orthodox monarch as the Head of the spiritual State (but see above). As to Y. 53, 4: see above; the 'glorious blessing of Vohumanah,' rather than 'of the good-minded princely citizen' is our first thought.)

In Y. 53, 5: abhyutā ahāṁ yē vaṁśeṣa manauḥḥo... 'strive after the life of the good-minded man' is best.

But it is hardly a secondary object with me here to bring into clear light that most difficult fact (before noticed) with reference to the use of all these terms, the fact, viz.: that the meanings applied to them not only differ so seriously as we have seen that they do, but that these differing shades of this great idea of vohumanah follow closely and abruptly one upon the other, with little or no transitional modification.
In order to show this in an unmistakable form I will give myself the laborious trouble to review some of the occurrences of Vohumanah no longer sifted out in logical order in view of the shades of ideas to which they refer, but just as they occur in the natural flow of the strophes. And I will ask the reader to fasten his attention on those strange circumstances which have made these venerable fragments what Darmesteter so justly called the ‘enigma’ (of oriental literature). And together with this I will endeavour to increase the distinctness of our recognition of the fact that the exegesis is sometimes uncertain.

After scholarship has exhausted every possible source of information respected by any school, at times even then we cannot tell which one of the four related concepts was most prominently present in the composer’s mind when he first chanted certain strophes. And of course my own opinions have changed as to various details since 1892–94, when I published the Five Zarathushtrian Gāthas; and I make an especial endeavour to multiply the alternatives, as the only scientific procedure.

At the outset vohumanah met us in its most familiar, but by no means most frequent, application as expressing more immediately the ‘good-minded man,’ the orthodox, or ‘saintly,’ citizen.

In Y. 28, 1: yasa . . . v. khratūṁ manaṁḥo . . ., ‘I pray for the understanding of the good-minded (man)’ we found to be most probably the meaning, while at the immediately following strophe we have the undoubted sense ‘with a good disposition of mind,’ in ‘I who encompass you with a good mind’ (Y. 28, 2), and at the next further strophe in Y. 28, 3, we have Vohumanah as the Subdeity or Archangel, ‘I who will praise you, Asha and Vohumanah.’ Here are three out of the four differing shades of meaning closely grouped with neither space nor explanatory statements between them at the very beginning of the first Gātha that meets us as they are now arranged in the MS. (not necessarily at all however the first in the order of original composition).

Having decided (see above) that the words ‘I who will devote my soul’s attention to watchfulness (or ‘to Heaven,’ that is to say ‘to the Mount Alborj’ (so)) would be more naturally followed by vohū manaṁḥā in the sense of ‘with a good disposition of mind in the individual worshipper (though of the humblest rank), note that at the closely following Y. 28, 5, the words in the accusative (so probably, or vocative) express the Personified Attribute again as the Subdeity or Archangel. While the words in the next further following strophe express immediately and for the first time the clear conception of the Divine Attribute as a purely intellectual and moral concept.

In connection with 'giving asha-gifts' 'vohā manaḥśa with benevolence' must be here the idea conveyed by the words (in the adverbal instrumental, and not in the sociative 'in company with thy personified attribute vohumanah' which would be impossible), while at the very next metrical lines the first form of the idea reappears in the words: 'give the attained prizes of the good-minded one' (i.e. of the good man); see the following 'to Viśāspa and to me.'

And this is still further expounded into the broader idea of a 'dispensation of good men' (so to speak) in Y. 28, 8 (see above), 'For all the ages of Vohumanah' must mean 'of the good-minded one or ones.'

Once more at the next strophe the Archangelic personification presents itself with, however, the varying adjective vaḫiṣṭa the best; while at strophe Y. 28, 10, 'the laws of the Good Mind' probably refers to the Personification, but in a barely figurative sense, the section ending as it began with Vohumanah as the 'Good-minded (citizen) the saint.' Without dwelling just here upon the subtle manner in which the main idea interpenetrates the less profound but obvious ones immediately presented, we cannot but express once more our wonder. The documents have been tested, as is known, in every way that can be devised. They are personal, excessively so (all is 'I,' and 'Thou,' and 'You' in them). They express a certain emotion, sometimes subdued, but sometimes passionate; they depict (without intending it) a state of public conflict as well as the doctrinal longings of a quasi-philosophical school. They are remotely ancient and related to the Veda, as all things combine to show; and yet here are some of the signal sentences which stood as the supporting columns of a religious intellectual temple (in which this strangely developed population passed their mental existence); and they are seemingly 'played with.' Four distinct, but yet closely related ideas expressed by them are rapidly interchanged without warning!

It certainly looks like the pedantic antic of a closely knit school of so-called experts, each aware within narrow limits of the sense intended for the identical term or terms. And yet this phraseology was published in a chanted hymn addressed to devout rustics coming in on especial occasions (yearly festivals, perhaps) 'from near and from afar!' Where is the parallel of such a state of things in a religious community? Perhaps in such a public as the Commonwealth in England when the rank and file were familiar with the great commonplaces of the old so-called evangelical theology, but where else?

In Y. 29, 7 we should more naturally say, 'whom hast thou endowed with a good disposition of mind who shall give forth these teachings to the people' rather than 'whom hast thou in company with the private saint,' also rather than 'who shall do (this same thing) by the help of thine Archangel Vohumanah,' but this allusion to the good disposition of the human saint is followed in Y. 29, 10 (two strophes in advance) by an appeal to the characteristic of Benevolence in the Deity made certain by the verb 'give ye' in the imperative, while the words themselves 'vohā manaḥnā' are in the adverbial instrumental.

At the very next strophe again we have the Personification presented in such a key as is sounded in the words 'Come Ye.'

So in Y. 30, 1, the Yasnas to Vohumanah as the 'Archangel or Subdeity' is better, as we have seen, than the 'yasnas of (dative for genitive) the faithful worshipper,' but at the next strophe, Y. 30, 2, 'behold ye the flames with the best mind' refers to the mental disposition of the worshipper, and does not at all mean 'behold the flames in company with the good believer'; while in Y. 30, 7, the terms refer again to the personified concept last left at Y. 30, 1.

Upon this follows the interesting uncertainty in Y. 30, 10, where our first interpretation of the words 'in the well-disposed abode of vohumanah' might mean 'in the home of the good man'; but see 'Vohumanah' in the lead, with the words 'of Asha' and 'of Mazda' following, which fixes the very valuable passage as a certain delineation of Heaven. We may render freely and metrically: 'but swiftest in the good Abode of Vohumanah, Asha and Mazda hasten (or 'gather') those who are produced (or 'are advancing') in good fame.'

In Y. 31, 4, the person represented would not so naturally be said to pray 'in company with the private communicant vohumanah'; nor 'with his help,' but as 'inspired by the best mind,' as either 'the Archangel' or the 'internal disposition (vohumanah).'</rt>

So also 'to know through the good mind' cannot mean 'through the good man' in Y. 31, 5.

Whether the idea 'good man' (in the next strophe, v. 31, 8) is somewhat included in the 'growing' (or 'increase') of God's Kingdom or not, is a question. His good mind as the subdeity cannot, however, be excluded, and would be here our first preferred rendering.

But in the next following strophe, Y. 31, 7, Ahura is the 'Creator of asha the law, by which he may sustain the good mind.' Here the 'good-minded man (in general) would seem to be alluded to, if ever.

I was not at all so sure as to Y. 31, 8: God as the 'father of the faithful saint vohumanah' is a most natural rendering, but the attention of the composer may have been fixed upon distinguishing Ahura from the other Immortals; and it is here my especial duty to notice the multiplicity of ideas included in the singular terminology under discussion.

In Y. 31, 10, the typical husbandman might very naturally be said to be the 'prospered of the good man Vohumanah,' but he was himself the 'good minded-man'; the subdeity was therefore here indicated.

While in Y. 31, 17 (not far in advance), we might regard 'be to us the enlightener of the good man' as a good rendering; but 'illustrator' or 'expounder' of Thy good mind, as 'benevolent wisdom,' is also very possible, having the advantage of the literal meaning; yet in Y. 31, 21, in spite of all that may have preceded, the 'good mind' positively refers to the 'good-minded saint.'

In Y. 32, 2, only a few strophes distant, it would be exceedingly unnatural, that is to say 'uncritical,' for us to speak of 'Ahura as 'guarding' (or 'ruling') by means of his faithful subject,' even when understood as the 'good-minded man (the king) vohumanah: so of the passage two strophes further on at Y. 32, 4, after 'beloved of the Daēva gods,' 'departing from the good mind' would more naturally refer to the Archangel, (though we might still be tempted to say 'beloved of the Daēva party and cast out by the good citizen vohumanah'). While as a contrast to either of the renderings, in Y. 32, 11 (not far off), we have the words 'from the best mind,' evidently used in its natural sense, and not in the sense of the 'good man' because the good man’ ‘the saint’ is already expressed emphatically in the immediate connection by a separate and a proper word ‘ashaonē.’

While again in Y. 32, 15, the ‘abode of the good mind’ would suit very well to the idea of the ‘heavenly home of the good man, the saint’: if it were not for such passages as Y. 30, 10, where the saints are said to ‘hasten (or to ‘unite’) in the good abode (well-appointed amenity) of Vohumanah, Asha, each named with Mazda at their apex, and evidently understood as His Archangels in Heaven, a very different idea from the ‘best mind’ of Y. 32, 11 (four strophes before Y. 32, 15); so also of the ‘streets where Ahura dwells (see below).’

In Y. 33, 3, we should indeed very naturally render, ‘let him who is best to the saint be in the pasture of our saintly Community,’ lit. ‘of the good mind’; but we have the idea of the ‘saint’ again fully expressed in another word ‘ashaonē’ in the immediate connection. The Guardian Personification is therefore most prominently intended.

So in Y. 33, 5, we should quite naturally say ‘gaining long life in the kingdom of the good-minded typical saint (our holy sovereign),’ but then see the following allusion to the ‘paths in which Ahura dwells,’ which rather enforces the acceptance of the Ameshaspand. But in Y. 33, 7, we have ‘the subjective mental state’ as the more immediate idea conveyed. ‘Let one see in company with the congregation “Ašha,” and of the individual believer (Vohumanah), how I am listened to... is not at all so probable (if indeed possible), as ‘let one see aright (aṣha) and with sympathetic good will’ vohā manāināh ‘how I am heard.’... And yet this version of vohumanah contrasts with that last considered in the almost immediately contiguous connection at Y. 33, 5.

While in Y. 33, 8: ‘obtain for me’ or ‘make known to me’ (not a great difference in exegesis) then the good rites, that I may fulfill them inspired by thy good mind, or ‘with good will’ is better than ‘in company with the good man,’ for see what follows which is an allusion to the ‘praises of Ašha’ more naturally referring to the Personification.

So again in Y. 33, 9. ‘Let them bear the spirit of the two leaders to the shining home with the best-mind (the highest good will),’ is better than ‘in company with the saint or by his help.’ ‘The two leaders who helped on asha’ were themselves prominent representatives of vohumanah as meaning the ‘typical saint,’ and so would not expect help from one of their own number.
So again in Y. 33, 10, we have, ‘make our bodily strength to increase through goodness of mind, justice and civic order,’ so, first, but the ‘guardian spirits Vohumanah, Asha and Khshathra’ is decidedly better than the other view, ‘cause our bodily life to prosper through the good citizen, the holy community in general, and the “Government” in particular.’ And the recognition of the concept of the Personification is also decidedly better in view of the most significant, Y. 33, 11. Here these same Vohumanah, Asha, and Khshathra with Áramaiti are invoked and besought ‘to come.’ (Should we say ‘hear me thou who art the good citizen, the holy community, and the government, come and cleanse and pardon me’; hardly. Even to report ‘O Benevolence, O Sanctity, O Sovereign Authority, and O Holy Zeal, hear Ye me and cleanse’ would be difficult as surpassing even ‘the subdeity’ in its sublimity. The Archangels are meant; see Ahura at the head of them.)

But in Y. 33, 12, the next strophe, we have ‘gifts’ prayed for through asha, vohumanah, etc.; and this latter here means ‘the disposition of mind.’ The person of the ‘good citizen’ as represented by vohumanah is of course excluded. The ‘good man’ was the person who needed the proposed favors, and could in no sense be regarded as sharing in the act of ‘gift.’ Nor can it be said that the other great Personifications hold their own just here; though we had them in such striking form in the preceding verse. The words should undoubtedly be rendered as expressing the subjective disposition of the Being invoked ‘give me power through Thy holy zeal (áramaiti), with fidelity (aśå), and with kindness (vohā munanhā)?

But in Y. 33, 13, and again the next strophe, the ‘ashi’s of Vohumanah refer to the Archangel Vohumanah.’ They might indeed well mean the ‘rewards of the good man,’ if it were not for ‘aśå’ in the last line, which once more introduces the adverbial instrumental of help; and this forbids the presence of the idea of the human subject in those immediate words, obliging us to refer them to the Higher Powers; but in the next following and closing strophe of the section, we might safely say that the ‘prestige of vohumanah’ was Zarathuštra’s ‘leadership of the citizens.’ That he should have been said to offer the ‘priority of the good mind’ in the high subjective sense seems almost too hyper-spiritual as an object for offering (yet some expositors might well prefer it).
In Y. 34, 3, where 'offerings' are spoken of for 'all the farms in the Realm' which are cultivated by Vohumanah as the 'good citizen,' this latter rendering looks very natural. But as line 4 speaks of offerings to Asha, Vohumanah would not be so naturally used in the same breath (so to speak) in a sense not in analogy. Moreover the Personified Attribute as the Archangel is here he who 'shelters the farms.' While in contrast at the next but one following strophe, Y. 34, 5, the individual characteristic of the human subject is plainly indicated. The 'shelter of the poor (saint)' is not spoken of as a duty to be done 'with the help of the community (asha),' and 'with that of the individual citizen (vohumanah). These were the parties to be assisted, and not the means of assistance. Not even 'with Asha (as the Archangel)' is to be accepted; nor 'with the help of Vohumanah.'

But the supplicator wishes for 'sovereign power, and wealth that he may nourish the poor community with fidelity (ashā) and is with benevolence (vohā maanañāhā). While in the next strophe these great adverbials either qualify the activity of Ahura, and not, as in the previous verse, that of the speaker: 'if ye (plural of majesty) are really thus, true (endowed with justice (ashā) and benevolent (vohā maanañāhā), show me a sign in every house of this people (or 'in all my sojourn in this life')... we have either this, which contrasts so decidedly with personification, or else we have what contrasts as much with what precedes it: 'If ye are thus really together with Asha and Vohumanah... (Notice the impossibility of, 'if ye,' O Ahura, are thus together with the community (asha) and the individual saint (vohumanah)...).

Yet at Y. 34, 8, closely following, we have 'from those who do not consider the law (asha) from these afar abideth Vohumanah,' (not perhaps so naturally 'the good-minded man will hold aloof,' but 'the Guardian Spirit of goodness will remain afar from him.'

In the next following, Y. 34, 9, we have the same idea slightly varied 'They who abandon Devoted Zeal (dramaītī) in their ignorance of the good mind, Vohumanah, can hardly mean 'in their non-acquaintance with the good man.' The 'spirit of benevolence' as the main idea of the Faith is indicated, or else that spirit personified.

In Y. 34, 10, 'the deeds of the good mind' is better understood as expressing the 'active side of religion' than the conduct of the private citizen, vohumanah' (however exalted) because the 'individual' is already sufficiently expressed in the term hu-krauš. While in the next following strophe, Y. 34, 11, the 'government of the good-minded' probably refers indirectly to one of the saintly princes, but the grouping of all the seven names looks as if the 'personalities' were purposely introduced (yet see the words 'through these, O Mazda, art thou safe from thy foes'). While again in the next immediately following strophe the 'paths trod by the good-minded man (vohumanah)' seems to be decidedly the most natural view; but our impressions may vary at different times. And so in Y. 34, 13, we have 'the way of the good-minded man (vohumanah). Neither of the views, however, totally excludes the alternative interpretation, which was 'the way pointed out by the Archangel Vohumanah.' And so of the 'actions of the good-minded (man)' in Y. 34, 14, while in the next and culminating strophe this idea seems utterly impossible. 'Tell me this with the good man' (rohā manaḥhā) is, of course, nonsense, as would be also 'tell it to me with the congregation (āshā). 'Tell me kindly (with good mind)' is the idea beyond any reasonable doubt, and 'tell me truly (āshā with truth).'

This may suffice for the Gātha Ahunavaiti; and it also renders any further close tracing of the contrasts in the other Gāthas unnecessary. The interpretation chosen by me in each occurrence may be seen above and by searching out the citations of the different passages the student can judge for himself how strangely abrupt the transition from one of these uses to the others is. To any one at all aware of the extraordinary difficulties of the Gāthas it is not necessary for me to say that I endeavour to differ here from my chosen opinions in my book of 1892–94, just as I endeavoured in that extended work to advance upon those in the thirty-first volume of the Sacred Books of the East, 1887. And in the third part of the Gāthas, 'A Dictionary of the Gāthic Language of the Zend Avesta,' I am as ever varying freely, but alternatively, from previous conclusions. A convention of opinion on such an extraordinary theme can only be reached by labour as exhaustive as it is widespread; and to elaborate complete discussions of the entire Avesta should be nearly a life-time's work.

In view of what has been said above the reader will understand the extraordinary harassments which faced me in writing a translation of the Gāthas for non-experts in 1883–87. In a new edition of SBE. XXXI, which I may be obliged to undertake, I would elaborately define each occurrence of asha, vohumanah and the rest thus: 'all deeds done through asha (thy holy law),' 'the understanding of vohumanah (as thy good-minded saint),' etc. This is what I have done in the English verbatims just published.¹ The effect is heavy indeed; but more complete than the compromises to which I was obliged to resort in 1887, such as 'the Divine Righteousness' (for asha), which I then thought the best mode of comprehending the various concepts in a single phrase, though even then and there I added such phrases as 'in thy folk' for 'the community,' and the 'personified righteousness' for the Archangel.

Time Analysis of Sanskrit Plays. Second Series.—By A. V. Williams Jackson, Professor in Columbia University, New York, N. Y.

II. The Dramas of Harsha.

The present article forms a sequel to one published a year ago in this Journal, vol. xx. pp. 341-359, in which the problems of the time analysis of the dramas of Kālidāsa were examined. It belongs also to a series of studies which the present writer has been making in the field of the Sanskrit drama, a list of which is given below for convenience.1 With regard to the special interest and scope of researches into the use of the element of time, its observance or non-observance in Hindu plays, reference may be made to the introduction to the companion article just mentioned. The principal bibliographical references to works for consultation are there given and they need not be repeated here. Mention, however, may be made of the special books connected with Harsha, or Čīrī-Harshadeva as he is often called, so far as they have been used in the present monograph; a convenient bibliography of the entire drama of India will be published before long by my pupil, Mr. Montgomery Schuyler, Jr.

The question of a dramatist’s sources is of interest when one is studying the author’s use of the element of time in his plays. The source of the three dramas ascribed to Harsha’s name was the Bhātakathā, which has been lost. Nevertheless we can understand in a general way his use of that source, as well as his own lack of invention, if that may be said, by turning to the Kathāsārītāgāra, which is later than Harsha’s time but is based upon the Bhātakathā, as is also the Bhātakhāmānjari. The whole story of Vatsarāja, which is the subject of two of the plays, namely, the Ratnāvali and the Priyadarśikā, is given in detail or in substance in the Kathāsaritsāgara; and in like manner the episode of Jīmūtavāhana, which forms the theme of the Nāgānanda, is taken from a tale told in the same work, which recounts the history of King Vatsa (ch. 22) as well as in the Vṛtā portion of the Kathāsaritsāgara (ch. 90). We thus have most of the material which must have been used by Harsha in its earlier shape, and we can observe how our author has handled the events—changing, transposing, or keeping their sequence, as the case may be—for dramatic purposes. Thus the Priyadarśikā presents certain of the more important events of King Vatsa's life before and after his marriage with Queen Vāsavadattā. The time, however, was prior to his choice of Padmāvatī as a second queen, for the plot of this play is suggested by the king's liaison with Bandhumatī, as mentioned in a brief paragraph in the Kathāsaritsāgara (ch. 14 = 2. 6, cf. Tawney, transl. i. 97), prior to Padmāvatī's appearance on the scene. Yet in the play itself the author has chosen for dramatic purposes to mention Padmāvatī, as spoken of below (p. 95). Similarly, incidents connected with this second royal consort are woven into the plot of the Ratnāvali, to whichever period in Vatsa's career this drama may be supposed exactly to refer. The Nāgānanda, moreover, elaborates a story which Vatsa's minister Yāghhandaraiyaṇa narrates long after the king's second marriage, and yet in the Priyadarśikā this wise counsellor seems to be spoken of as if he were a previous and not an active minister as he is in the Ratnāvalī. Thus much for the treatment of the sequence of events, and so much also for the element of time, the lapse of which in the play we can help to check, as in the case of the story of Jīmūtavāhana, from what we know of Harsha's material as preserved in the Kathāsaritsāgara. With regard to the text of the Kathāsaritsāgara, reference may be made to the Bombay edition and to Brockhaus; for the translation, consult Tawney The Kathā Sarit Sāgara, 2 vols., Calcutta, 1880, 1884. Some hints may also be gotten from Lévi's summary of the Brhatkathāmaṇījari, Journal Asiatique, 1896.

As for the dramas themselves, I have made use of the text of the Nirṇaya Sāgara series in the case of the Ratnāvalī and of the Priyadarśikā. The former play was edited by Godbole and Parab, Bombay 1890; the latter by Gadré, Bombay 1884, and also in the Satya Press series by Jibananda Vidyasagara, Calcutta 1874. The references to the Nāgānanda are to the edition of Brahme and Paranjape (Arya Vijaya Press), Poona 1893, checked occasionally by the edition of Bhanap, Bombay 1892. With regard to translations, I had access to two in the case of the Ratnāvali: one the familiar rendering by Wilson, Theatre of the Hindus, ii. 255–319, the other by Fritze, Chemnitz 1878. For the Priyadarśikā I consulted Strehly, Paris 1888, and an unpublished English version by Mr. G. K. S. Nariman, of Surat, which I hope later to edit and to publish conjointly with him, after adding an introduction. Two renderings of the Nāgānanda were also accessible: the one by Palmer Boyd, with Professor Cowell’s introduction, London 1872, the other by Bergaigne, Paris 1879.

We are now prepared to turn to our detailed study of Harsha’s employment of the element of time in his dramatic work.

1. Ratnāvali.

Plot of the play in brief: Ratnāvali, the daughter of the King of Ceylon, has been destined by a prophecy to become the second wife of King Vatsa, or Udayana. She is sent by sea to his capital but is shipwrecked on the way. Chance rescues her, however, and King Vatsa’s chief minister places her in the queen’s keeping without revealing her identity. The king sees the girl and falls in love with her, and when her high station as princess is disclosed in the fourth act she becomes his second bride and is favorably accepted by the queen, to whom she is related by blood.

Number of acts, four.

Act I—In an introductory monologue King Vatsa’s minister, Yāungadharāyaṇa, tells how the princess Ratnāvali, or Sāgārikā as she is called in the play, has been rescued from shipwreck and that she is now in the keeping of the queen, Vāsavadattā. The minister himself alone knows her identity, which he has recognized by a necklace that she wears. Yāungadharāyaṇa adds that Bābhravya and Vasubhūti, the chamberlain and minister of the princess’s father, were rescued at the same time as Ratnāvali, but were separated from her, and that they are now on their way to King Vatsa’s palace. He also says that Rumanvata, the commander-in-chief of Vatsa’s army, has been despatched to overthrow the rebellious king of the Kočalas. This prologue gives the information needed for understanding the action of the drama, and the play begins.
The opening scene is laid on one of the days of the great Kāma celebration, or vernal festival in honor of Cupid (cf. mudana-maha, vasanta, and in the stage direction, vasantotsava, pp. 3–4). It is on this very day that the queen, Vāsamadattā, is to do special homage to the god of love (cf. adya mudanamahotsave and ajja mae... bhaavudo ksumāuhaassa pīṇā nivattuidavvā, p. 8. 15–19), and the king is at once to join her (uṣyam aham āgata eva, p. 9. 8). This day is probably the thirteenth day of the bright half of the month Cāitra (consult Apte Skt. Eng. Dict. s. v. madana-trayodasi, and compare the admirable tables of the Hindu months and seasons which will be found in my friend Professor Lanman’s translation of the Karpūra-maṇjarī, shortly to appear). The time, then, would answer approximately to the first of April. There is a mention of the blossoming of the trees and flowers, especially of the budding of the queen’s favorite madhavi-creeper which bloomed earlier than the king’s jasmine (cf. māhavi ladā... pomeiū laiā, p. 11. 3), and allusion is made to the maina or talking bird, the starling which plays so important a part in the sequel (cf. kisa tumām ajja... sāriam uṣhhiā tha āgadā, p. 11. 16, sāriā, p. 12. 2). At the close of the act the sun is setting; twilight falls, and the moon rises as the scene ends (cf. pp. 14–15).

Time of the first act, part of the afternoon of one day until moonrise.

Act II.—The second act opens apparently on the next day, for the festival of Cupid is still being celebrated (cf. pautumana-mahāsoave bhaavāvī aṣūgū, p. 19. 1). It is now probably the fourteenth day of the month Cāitra (see remark under Act i., and consult Apte Skt. Eng. Dict. s. v. madana-catūrdaśī). There seems to be good reason for not assuming any longer interval; for the ‘starling’ (sārikā) which had been placed by the disguised princess in the keeping of her friend Susaṅgatā in Act i. (p. 12) is alluded to as if Sāgariṅā had forgotten to come after it (p. 16), and in the dénouement of this act the bird plays the chief rôle (cf. p. 16 seq.). Moreover, the preceding day seems to be implied when the love-lorn Sāgariṅā sketches the king’s picture (pp. 17, 18), reproducing the scene connected with the Kāma festival. In addition to this, the magician who has taught the king how to make his jasmine flower blossom like the queen’s mādhavi-creeper has come to court ‘to-day’ (ajja, p. 16. 13) which may reasonably be regarded as the day after Act i.
It is also 'to-day' (adya, bis, p. 23. 10, 20) that his wonderful legerdemain will be put to the test, so that the queen shall be outdone (cf. adyo 'dyānalatām, p. 23. 10 and sayam adya, p. 23. 20); and this actually comes to pass at the end of the act (cf. kusumidā nomālīś-iti, p. 37. 16). The movement of the scene itself is uninterrupted, and the queen is filled with jealousy on discovering the picture of the king and Sāgarikā, and she leaves the stage (p. 39). The act closes with the resolve of the king to follow his royal consort and to pacify her (cf. deviṁ prasādayitum adhyantaram eva praviśāval, p. 40. 7).

Time of the second act, apparently part of the next day after the first act, although the time is not conclusively defined.

Act III—It is somewhat doubtful whether the third act is to be placed on the afternoon of the same day, as the closing scene of the preceding act, with its episode of jealous anger over the picture; or on the day following. In either case there is no long interval between the two. Much depends upon the interpretation to be given to the twice-repeated aija ‘to-day’ (pp. 41. 17, 42. 7). The maiden Kāñcanamālā in the induction scene (pravacaka) explains that she has overheard an important conversation as she was passing the picture gallery 'to-day' (aija kkhū, p. 41. 17), to the effect that the king's indisposed health was due only to love-sickness for Sāgarikā. She also tells us that Sāgarikā had been placed by the jealous queen 'to-day' under her charge (aija kkhū devie cittaphalaavattamānikidāi sāariniṁ mama hatthe samappaantie, p. 42. 7–8). Is it the same day as that in Act ii., or is it the day following? On the whole it seems best to understand the reference to be to the day following. It seems as if a day should be allowed to elapse, to give time for the king to assume the guise of indisposed health in order to conceal his love-sick devotion to Sāgarikā (vassathāthaṁmahīṣa maśaivatthāṁ pacchā- dvanto, p. 43. 5) and to allow time for the change in the deportment of Sāgarikā herself under the watch that has been set over her by the queen (cf. sāariniṁ mama hatthe samappaantie, p. 42. 8), for she shrinks from every gaze and pines away. The king, moreover, has sent the Vidūshaka for news about Sāgarikā; his inquiry and his anxiety would seem to imply more than a lapse of a couple of hours which would have to be the case if the scene were on the same day as Act ii.; and he wonders why the Vidūshaka delays so long (cf. presītaṁ ca mayā tādārthāṁvesāndya vasantakah tat katham cirayati, p. 44. 7, and again api kucaḥam priyāyāḥ sāgarikāyāḥ, p. 44. 17). The impression given by the opening lines of the Induction (cf. kobi kāto tā, [sc. kāncanamālde] āacchia gaddetti, p. 41, 3) and by the act itself as a whole seems to require more hours to have elapsed than would be possible if both acts were to be placed on the same day. Still, Windisch, Der griechische Einfluss, p. 48, n. 2, prefers to crowd the events of Act iii into the afternoon and evening of the same day as Act ii. Whichever way this question be decided, there is no doubt as to the hour of the day which is to be represented in the present act; it is late in the afternoon when the king inquires 'how much of the day remains' (kim avaçīstam ahan, p. 45. 12). Sunset is at hand and the glories of the scene, together with the coming of darkness and the rising of the moon, are described (compare the allusions from atthagirisaharokāpanaṁ anusaradi bhaavaṁ sahassarasmi, p. 45. 15, as far as udido bhavaṁ mīlatañchano, p. 51. 5). It is then that Sāgarikā disguised in one of the queen's dresses which Kāncanamālā had given her, joins the king as arranged for 'this evening' by that attendant and the Vidūshaka (cf. padoṣe etc. in Kāncanamālā's speech, p. 42. 11, and aju in the Vidūshaka's encouraging words, p. 44. 10). The queen interrupts the moonlight rendezvous. Finding the king making love to Sāgarikā she takes the girl prisoner, captures the go-between Vidūshaka, and leaves the stage in high dudgeon. The king follows to pacify her (cf. devin eva prasādayitum, p. 58. 18). The scene closes late in the night.

Time of the third act, late afternoon and evening of the day following Act ii., or the same day—see discussion above.

Act IV.—The events of the fourth act follow directly after the preceding day. Owing to the king's intercession the queen releases the Vidūshaka, as we learn from the Prologue. The attendant maid Susāṅgatā has no news to add to his own information except that 'it is not known where the unhappy Sāgarikā was conveyed by the queen at midnight after giving out the report that she had been despatched to Ujjain' (sā kkhu tabassini devi ujjainin peside-ti jañappavāduṁ kadna ubatthide addharatte na jāntuṁ kuhaṁ nide-ti, p. 60. 4–5). Events prove, however, that Sāgarikā was not taken away. Through an extraordinary combination of circumstances she is rescued by the king, and at the same moment the shipwrecked chamberlain and minister of Sāgarikā's royal father arrive upon the scene and recognize in her the lost princess Ratnāvalī. Her identity is proved by the necklace, and she is found to be the destined bride of King Vatsa as well as own cousin to Queen Vāsavadattā, who rejoices over the discovery of her kinswoman and accepts her as a co-wife. The happy moment is made more complete by the news that King Vatsa’s general Rumanīvat has triumphed over Koṣala (cf. Act i.) and the events of the three or four days covered by the action of the drama are brought to a close.

Time of the fourth act, part of the day following the preceding act.

Summary of the duration of the action of the Rātmāvalī.

Act i., part of one day, from afternoon until moonrise. 1
Act ii., apparently part of the next day. 1
Act iii., late afternoon and evening of the following day, or of the same day—see discussion above. [1]
Act iv., part of the next day. 1

Thus the action of the play is practically continuous and its four acts are comprised within four days, or possibly in three.

2. Priyadarṣikā.

Plot of the play in brief: Priyadarṣikā, or Āraṇyakā as she is called in the play, is brought in early girlhood as a captive to the court of King Vatsa Udayana, and is placed under the care of queen Vāsavadattā, until she shall be of marriageable age. The king later falls in love with her and she is discovered to be the daughter of a friendly monarch, Drīhavarmā, who had been taken prisoner by an enemy ‘over a year’ before (saṃhitiṣa saṃhitaaṃ parantarā, p. 42. 10), or at the very moment when Priyadarṣikā was accidentally captured and brought to Vatsa’s court. King Vatsa restores Drīhavarmā to his throne by overcoming his captor, the king of Kaliṅga. The princess Priyadarṣikā, as she now turns out to be, is united to Vatsa at this happy moment as the play closes. Number of acts, four.

An analysis of the time covered by the action of this play is more difficult than in the case of the preceding drama. The chief personages, King Vatsa and his companion, the Vidūśaka Vasantāka, Queen Vāsavadattā and her attendant Kāñcanamāli, are the same as before. Rumanīvat, however, who was the leading general in the Rātmāvalī, is now prime minister; and Yāugandharāyaṇa, who figured as minister in the Ratnāvali, is now mentioned only in the interlude play (garbhāntaka), which is introduced in the third act of the present drama to recount certain incidents in King Vatsa's earlier career (cf. susaṁnīhitāṁ sarvāṁ yāugandharāyaṇena, p. 32. 8). Once in this drama, moreover, allusion is made to Vatsa's second wife, Padmāvatī, and to other wives (cf. devīnāṁ vāsavadattā-padmāvatādevīnāṁ aṁnīyaṁ a devīnāṁ, p. 24. 7-9), of whom no mention is made in the Ratnāvali. But too much stress must not be laid on this point, nor on the change of ministers, to show that the Priyadarṣikā refers to a somewhat later period in Vatsa's married life. Such a view, however, would in a measure be borne out by the sequence of events which must have been found in Harsha's source, the Bhātakathā, if we may judge by the order in which they are narrated in the Kathāsāritsāgara, ch. 14 = 2. 6 (cf. Tawney's translation, i. 97 seq.). Yet both Rumanāvat and Yāugandharāyaṇa occupy the position of ministers in the Kathāsāritsāgara without special difference between them as to generalship or counsel.

One point comes out clearly when the time element in this play is studied; it is that Harsha in this play has followed the convention of compressing events that occupy more than a year into a period that seems to be a year, as laid down by the laws of Hindu dramaturgy. For quotations from the canon on this point, see my preceding paper in JAOS. xx. 343. Thus the events which play a part at the opening of this drama, the escape of King Vatsa with his bride Vāsavadattā, the misfortunes of King Drḍhavarman, and the overthrow of King Vindhya-ketu which brings Priyadarṣikā to Vatsa's court, can hardly have been almost simultaneous, as the play for dramatic purposes treats them to be. It is for harmonizing such matters that the conventional Induction (vīskambhaka) is made use of by the author (consult on this subject SD. 308, 314 and Lévi, Théâtre Indien, p. 59). The growth of Priyadarṣikā to marriageable age and the release of her kingly father, Drḍhavarman, who has been in captivity 'over a year' (samahīam saṁvaccharaṁ, p. 42. 10) by the time that the play closes, are compressed into a single year so as to follow the dramatic dictum, that 'business extending beyond a year should be comprised within a year' (varṣād ērṇhvan tu yad vascu tat syād varṣād adhobhavan, SD. 306). So much for the first general results of an examination into the time system of this play. Let us now turn to the details.
Induction.—King Vatsa has been promised the hand of Priyadārṣikā, daughter of King Dṛḍhavarman. The chamberlain of the latter, named Vīnayavasu, comes forward in the Induction (vīṣkambhakā) and informs us that a rival king, Kāliṅga, has taken Dṛḍhavarman prisoner because the latter had promised his daughter’s hand to King Vatsa instead of to him. Dṛḍhavarman’s captivity has therefore begun.

At the very time when Dṛḍhavarman’s realm was being invaded by Kāliṅga, King Vatsa himself was in captivity to another monarch, Pradyota, but he had escaped and had carried off the latter’s daughter, Vāsavadattā, as his bride. She is the jealous queen in this play as in the Ratnāvalī. We are furthermore told that King Vatsa is waging war against the king of the forests of Vindhya. From the chamberlain’s speech we learn that a battle had taken place on the very day on which he is speaking (cf. kathitūnī cādya mama vīndhyaketunā, etc., p. 3. 11). Vindhyaketu is slain, and the young girl Priyadārṣikā, who had been temporarily left for safety in Vindhyaketu’s forest abode, is captured by King Vatsa’s victorious forces. This brings the daughter of Dṛḍhavarman to Vatsa’s court. Further news than this the chamberlain who had lost her can not tell. He only knows that his own lord, Dṛḍhavarman, is a prisoner to Kāliṅga (baddhas tiṣṭhati, p. 3. 13).

From the chamberlain’s closing words we learn also that the season of the year is autumn (ahot atidūraṇatā garadaṭapasya, p. 3. 15); the sun is passing from the zodiacal sign Virgo to Libra (kanyāgraṇatā parīn tulaṇī prāpya, p. 3. 18), which likewise implies a covert allusion to the king’s change of affection from Vāsavadattā to Priyadārṣikā.

Time of the induction, duration of the action itself, i. e. some part of a day.

Interval of several days.—A slight interval separates the Induction (vīṣkambhakā) from Act i. There are several things which show this. In the first place the Vidūshaka speaks of Dṛḍhavarman’s having been imprisoned by Kāliṅga (dīḍhavammin baddho-tti, p. 4. 15). Furthermore, King Vatsa says it is ‘many days’ (bahūny ahāni, p. 4. 19) since he has sent his own chief general, Vijayasena, against Vindhyaketu. These days must be accounted for, since they fall in part within the present action. In some degree it is possible to do this. The victorious general returns in the first part of Act i; from his own words we know that it required a forced march of ‘three days’ (divasatrayena, p. 6. 3) to reach Vindhyaketu and that the battle began immediately after his arrival. The day of the conflict was the very one in which the scene of the Induction (viskambhaka) is laid as we have already found (cf. adya, p. 3. 11). It must have taken almost as much time again for the general with his army to return. This period of at least six days may well form a good part of the ‘many days’ (bahûny akhâni) which King Vatsa impatiently feels have elapsed since the general was first despatched—unless we are to regard bahûny akhâni as a mere dramatic exaggeration. In any case it seems fair to allow no less than three days for the interval between the viskambhaka and Act i. We may now turn to the act itself.

Act I.—King Vatsa comes upon the stage and his general returns victorious. He brings in his triumphant train a young girl who is supposed to be the daughter of the dead Vindhyaketu (cf. vindhyaketa... taddhite ‘ti, p. 7. 10-11). She is really, however, Priyadarşikâ the child of the imprisoned Dr̥havarman. Vatsa appoints the girl to be a maid in waiting upon Vásavaddâ, and he directs the queen to remind him when Aranyakâ (i.e. Sylvia), as she is henceforth called, is old enough to be married (yudâ naraioyâ bhavisyati tadâ mān smārayet, p. 7. 16). At the close of the act, when all are leaving the stage, the hour is midday (cf. naḥmadhyam adhyâste bhagaṇa sahasra-didhitih, p. 7. 23, and other similar allusions). Plans are to be made for celebrating a fête in honor of the victorious Vijayasena who is next to be sent against Kaliṅga (p. 8. 6), a campaign which plays a part in the sequel (Act iv.).

Time of the first act, the forenoon of one day.

Interval of fully a year.

An interval of at least a year is to be assumed between Act i. and Act. ii. This is shown in several ways. First and foremost we must account for the expression ‘over a year’ used in the closing act regarding the length of Dr̥havarman’s imprisonment (cf. samahiam saṁvauccharam, p. 42. 10). The present place between Act i. and Act. ii. is the only one in the drama where we can allow for this longer lapse of time, since there is not any break of importance either before Act iii or before Act iv. Again, as already stated, the king had bidden that Priyadarṣikâ, or Aranyakâ as she is called in the play, should be the queen’s maid of honor until she should reach a marriageable age (cf. p. 7. 16). In the second act one of the attendants says she must tell the queen 'to-day' (ajja p. 14. 2) that Aranyakā is now marriageable, as the king had commanded to be reminded when she attained that age. When the king now sees her he speaks of 'having long been robbed' (cīram muṣṭāh smo vayaṁ, p. 14. 10) of a pleasure he would like to have enjoyed. Moreover, Aranyakā and her associate, Indivārikā, seem to have become such devoted friends in the interval that has elapsed that they can hardly be separated (cf. nu sakkuṇomi tue vinā ettha āśīduṁ, p. 13. 21), although Aranyakā has well kept the secret of her exalted birth all the time (cf. p. 11. 8). The time is now the rainy season of autumn once again, as is shown by the allusions to the luxuriance of the flowers and to the autumnal rains (p. 10. 6, 15; 12. 5, etc). But more especially is it shown by the reference to the grand autumnal celebration of the full moon, or the Kānumū festival, in Āṣvina-Kārttika (September-November). This is mentioned at the beginning of Act iii. and again in Act iv., and both of these acts follow in sequence after Act ii. without any important break. It is to be supposed, therefore, that an interval of fully a year has elapsed between Act i. and Act ii. The interval may possibly have been even longer owing to the tendency, for dramatic purposes, to comprise events within a year as explained above. In that event the expression 'over a year,' as found in the fourth or last act, would be a milder expression for a somewhat longer period. See above.

Act III.—At the opening of the second act the queen is temporarily absent as she has undertaken a vow and a fast (cf. sotthiś.naṇa, p. 8. 12) and the lonely king is in need of diversion (cf. kuruṇi eso piṇavaśo ajja devie virahukkanthāvīṇodanaṃ mitten dhārīgharuyūjanai eva putthido, p. 8. 10-17, and also kaṁmīnu adya priyām, p. 9. 3-6). It is late afternoon (cf. attathāhilāsinā sujjena maulavijjanti, p. 11. 3) when the meeting of the king and Aranyakā unexpectedly takes place, and the sun is setting when their interview closes (cf. attthamañilāsi bhāvaṁ sahasarasasi, p. 18. 15, and parinatapraṇyo divasaḥ, p. 18. 17). The whole action is swift and unbroken.

Possibly a very slight interval? Only a very slight interval, if any, separates Act iii. from Act ii., for the queen is again present after her fast; and the allusion made by one of the girls to Āranyakā's distracted air 'yesterday' (hio, p. 19. 12) and to the absent-minded acting of her part in the rehearsal of the mimic play which is about to be given, seem to imply that the meeting with the king had taken place recently. The mimic play itself is to be performed 'to-day on the grand Kāumudī festival' (ajja ... komadīmahūsav, p. 19. 11); and if Āranyakā does not play her part better 'to-day' (ajja, p. 19. 13) there is danger of the queen's displeasure. Āranyakā's conversation with her confidante Manorāmā, moreover, seems to imply that little time could have elapsed since the preceding act. The disguised princess points out the very spot where she had been embraced by the king, as if but shortly before (cf. auiś so uddeso jassim etc., p. 21. 3), and Manorāmā asks her if she really had been seen by the king, implying that the incident, or at least the gossip about it, was fresh (cf. tumum mahāraṇa diṭṭhā na re-tī, p. 21. 15). The interval must have been long enough, however, to give a show of credibility to the exaggerated statements about Āranyakā's sighing 'day and night' (dīhharattiin, p. 23. 1) and also to the Viḍūshaka's jesting complaint that Vatsa had not slept 'day or night,' nor allowed him to do so (cf. tena sahu mae dīvārattāṁ niḍdā na diṭṭhū, p. 34. 2), while the affairs of state are simply neglected by the king (cf. pariccattārakajjo, p. 23. 9). The queen also has had time to take the alarm and to keep Āranyakā out of the king's sight (cf eṣā mama priyasakhi mahāraṣyasya devyā durcanupathād api raksyate, p. 30. 22). In this interval, furthermore, the Viḍūshaka has made an unsuccessful search for Āranyakā in the women's apartment (p. 24. 9).

Act III.—The third act itself opens on the evening of the Kāumudī festival, the occasion when the mimic play is to be presented (cf. adya ratiin, p. 30. 23, ajja ... komadīmahūsav, p. 19. 11, and also kāumudimahotsav, p. 44. 2). The autumnal day has been a hot one (cf. sarudāvena saṁstappāṁ ajja etc., p. 22. 11) and the twilight is already past by the time they are ready to begin the interlude-performance (cf. adikkandā kku sanjīhā, p. 27. 17). By the close of the act it is bedtime (idānim caṇānayaṁ gatvā, p. 41. 2). The king retires for the night planning some means to propitiate his jealous queen, who has hurried Āranyakā and the Viḍūshaka off to prison.

Time of the third act, part of an evening which is devoted to the incident of the mimic play.

Slight interval. Some interval, not long however, separates Act iii from Act iv. This is shown especially by allusions in the introductory Prologue or pravepaka. Āraṇyaka is now in prison by order of Vāsavadatta, so that her confidante Manoramā has not seen her for some time (etiam kālam, p. 41. 10). Yet the interval can not have been a long extended one because the queen's allusion to the incident between Āraṇyaka and the king in the mimic play would seem to imply that that occasion was more or less recent (tuha uṇā edāḥ āraṇṇīye uttantaṁ pacac-khaṁ, p. 43. 18–19). A like inference may be drawn from Sāṅkṣṭyāyanī's reference to the same episode during the full moon festival (cf. kāmudīmahotsava, p. 44. 2). The only other time allusion which needs mention in this connection is found in a speech of the king. As commented on below, he says that it is 'some days' (katipayāṇy ahāni, p. 47. 8) since he received the news of his general Vijayasena's expected victory over Kaliṅga and of the consequent rescue of the long-imprisoned Drāhavarman. Allowing therefore for this slight interval we may take up the final act of the drama.

Act IV.—The importance of the fourth act with reference to the rest of the play is that we learn from its Prologue that 'over a year' (samahāṁ suvaccchaḥ, (p. 42. 10) has elapsed since Drāhavarman was taken prisoner by Kaliṅga, the hated foe against whom King Vatsa at the close of Act i. had determined to send his general Vijayasena after the victory over Vindhyaketa had been duly celebrated. In the midst of Act iv. the king reads a letter which he received from his general 'some days' before (katipayāṇy ahāni, p. 47. 8), announcing that the fall of Kaliṅga might be expected 'to-day or to-morrow' (adya pva vā, p. 47. 17). The siege has apparently been a long and exhausting one (cf. p. 47. 10–18). At this very moment the general himself enters to announce his triumphal success. He is accompanied by Vinayavasu, the old chamberlain of Drāhavarman who appeared at the opening of the play. Through the victory of Vatsa's forces Drāhavarman is reseated on his throne (p. 49. 1). At this same instant of news-giving, the old chamberlain of the restored monarch recognizes Āraṇyaka as Priyadarśikā, the lost daughter of Drāhavarman, and he explains her relationship to the queen, who is her cousin. As the act closes, Priyadarśikā is united to the king as another wife, and all ends happily after the various vicissitudes filling the space of a year or more which forms the time of the action of the play.

Time of the fourth act, part of a day.
Summary of the duration of the action of the Priyādāsikā.

Induction (visakhākha), part of one day in the rainy season of autumn. 1 [Interval of several days.]

Act i., part of a day, forenoon until midday. 1
[Interval of at least a year—see discussion above.]

Act ii., the latter part of an autumn afternoon. 1 [Interval?—possibly a very slight interval, hardly more than a day or two at the utmost.]

[Only a slight interval.]

Act iv., part of one day. 1

Thus, the whole action of the play covers 'over a year,' from autumn until autumn. The long interval falls between Act i. and Act ii. The handling of events gives the impression of their having been compressed into the space of not much over a year, so as to comply with certain rules of the dramatic canon.

Plot of the play in brief: The hero, Prince Jīmūtavāhana, falls in love with Malayavatī, daughter of the king of the Siddhas, who is living in the forest. Their wedding feast is celebrated in the third act. In the next act, to save the life of another, the young prince offers his own life to the monstrous bird Garuḍa, who daily devours one member of the serpent race. Jīmūtavāhana is terribly torn by the monster, but he is restored to life before the fifth act closes, and as a reward for his vicarious suffering the whole serpent race is henceforth freed from destruction by Garuḍa. The season represented in the play is autumn. Number of acts, five.

Act I.—Prince Jīmūtavāhana, the hero of the play, has received the kingdom from his father, the king of the Vidyādharas, but Buddha-like he has no real love for the throne. He has made his subjects happy by his justice and his generosity, but now, abandoning the reins of government to his ministers, the young prince prefers, in loving devotion, to wait upon his father and mother in their recluse life in the forest.
The real action of the drama begins about the middle of the first act itself, when the youthful hero, wandering in the forest with his friend, the Vīdūshaka, catches sight of the princess Malayavatī, daughter of the king of the Siddhas, and falls in love with her. He first sees her as she is playing on her lute near the temple of the goddess Gaurī in the forest hermitage. From the conversation of the princess with her maid we learn that, as a reward for her pious devotion to the divinity, the goddess herself has appeared before her ‘to-day in a dream’ (ajja siriṇa, p. 12. 11, cf. also yam ajju kiddo, etc., p. 12. 8–9) and has promised that ‘Prince Jīmūtavāhana, the ruler of the Vidyādhara, shall wed her shortly’ (vijjāharacakkavatī de airenā eva pāṇiggahayam nirvattaiissati, p. 13. 2–3). This is the cue for the prince to reveal himself. But before he and Malayavatī have time to exchange confidences, an ascetic enters.

The words of this priestly hermit let us know that Mitrāvasu, the brother of the princess, has ‘gone to day’ (adya gataḥ, p. 16. 7) to propose a marriage between his sister and this very prince Jīmūtavāhana. The ascetic has been bidden to make haste, for ‘the hour of the midday oblation might slip away while Malayavatī is waiting’ (taccu, praṇāksamānaṇya malayavatyāḥ kaḍācin madhyāndinasvasanarelo tikrameta, p. 16. 8–9). The hour in fact is already midday; the sun is in the zenith as the act closes with its interchange of loving glances between Jīmūtavāhana and Malayavatī (cf. maṅghamāsora, p. 18. 2, ahyaita madhyānta adhyāste naḥastalasya bhayavān sahasradhīthī, p. 18. 8).

Act II.—The question whether the second act is to be regarded as falling on the same day as the first act or on the following day is not easy to decide. In the former case the time of Act ii. would have to be afternoon, in the latter case it would apparently be the forenoon. Much depends upon how much time we are to assume for Mitrāvasu’s search for the hero, as noted below, and upon the hour to be assigned for the ‘nuptial bath’ which gives the time of the closing of the act. The whole question, however, involves at most only a difference of a few hours, but as a matter of interpretation it is worth discussing and both sides of the question will be presented.

In the first place Malayavatī’s brother Mitrāvasu is said in Act i. to have ‘gone to-day’ (adya gataḥ, p. 16. 7) in quest of Prince Jimūtavāhana in order to offer to him the hand of his sister Malayavatī (cf. kumāra-jimūtavāhanam ihā 'va malayaparvate kvā'pi varamāhāṃ bhaginyā malayavatīya varahetor draśṭum, adya gataḥ p. 16. 6–7). Jimūtavāhana is said to be somewhere on the mountain (cf. malayaparvate), and several allusions in the play show that his abode in the forest was quite nearby (e.g. kumārajimūtavāhano 'nīmābhir ihā 'sannutaraḥ, p. 31. 12, and other incidental allusions which allow drawing an inference, such as the prompt return of the messenger, p. 34. 2–11, p. 38. 5–6, as mentioned below). Now although Mitrāvasu did not return by midday in Act i., he was evidently expected about that time, as is shown by the allusion to Malayavatī’s waiting, as already quoted (pratīkṣaṃānīyā malayavatīya kudacīn madhyāvādu-saeva-nāda 'tikrāmet, p. 16. 8). A direct continuation of this thought is found at the very opening of Act ii. Malayavatī has there sent an attendant to inquire if her brother be returned or no, for she wonders why ‘he tarries so long to-day’ (ajju ciraaḍi, p. 19. 2,—or ‘still delays,’ if the variant reading ajju-nī be adopted). A few minutes later, in the middle of this second act, Mitrāvasu does appear (tataḥ pravīṇa mitrāvān, p. 31. 10) and meets his sister who is in the sandalwood bower. To this same spot Jimūtavāhana himself has repaired even though he has been obliged to shorten the time due to his Gurus, in order to arrive there (cf. kīsa ma aju tamoḥ labh eva gurujaśāṃ svasusya iha ña-gado, p. 26. 14–15). To his friend, the Viṇūshaka, who had accompanied him, he has to acknowledge frankly that his weakness ‘this day’ is owing to lovesickness (cf. yenā 'dyā'ī 'vā etc. p. 26. 11). He gives the reason for seeking the sandalwood bower. It is that ‘in sleep to-day’ (adya kāluḥ śapme jñānāmi, p. 26. 17) he saw a vision of his beloved in that place, which has become dear to him in consequence, and where he wishes to ‘spend the rest of the day’ (cf. tud icchāmi śapmaṃdūtadaiyātāmaṃgamakarmanye 'śmin eva pradeśe divasa-śeṣam ativādayitum, p. 26. 20–21). We may presume that this vision in sleep was a day dream of Malayavatī, whom he had seen that very forenoon and wished again to see. Such an interpretation at least will allow for Mitrāvasu’s love mission of Act i. to have been completed on the same day in Act ii., which it may strongly be urged the context seems to demand. The details of the marriage would be arranged directly afterwards on the same afternoon, the hour of the ‘nuptial bath’ would be quite late, and the marriage ceremony would be that same evening 'in the first watch,' as mentioned again below. This would crowd the meeting of the lovers, the negotiation for their marriage, and the solemnization of the nuptials into a single day, which I find is done by Windisch in his brief mention of the time scheme of the play, Der griechische Einfluss, p. 48. Much may be said in favor of such an interpretation judging from the context.

On the other hand, if it were not for the context in regard to Mitrāvasu's mission, it would be simpler, and in many respects more natural, to place the incidents of Act ii. on the day following Act i. This is actually done in the Kathāsaritsāgara, which contains the story identical with our plot. The account found in that narrative allows a night to elapse, as is shown by its allusions to sleeping and to resorting to the temple of Gaurī early on the morning of the next day (cf. gauauṣṭho 'pi... prātāp ca
'tyutuuko bhūyas tud gauaurâyatanaî yayau, KSS. ch. 90=12.
23. 66–68; cf. also Tawney's translation ii. 311). In this case the vision seen 'in sleep to-day,' in the drama (adya khatu svapne jāni m, p. 26. 17), would have been a dream of the night just past after the hero had caught sight of Malayavati; the time of the act would be forenoon rather than afternoon, as with the other interpretation; and the allusion at the close of the act itself to the fact that the time of the nuptial bath had arrived (cf. udrāhavānuvelai, p. 40. 5, pravāna kām, p. 40. 6, uñña-áhānām vam gacchāvah, p. 40. 8) would be identical with the ordinary bathing time in the Vikramorvāṣī, Act ii. end, instead of towards evening as must otherwise be the case. In this way, moreover, the marriage would not be crowded into the same day as the lovers' first glimpse of each other, but would allow one day's preparation (cf. p. 40. 2); and new color or a different shade of meaning might be given to certain thoughts in Jimūtavāhana's speech beginning niññh kii na niññh, etc. (p. 26. 5–8), as that of the pining lover. If such be the case we must adopt a slightly different interpretation of the length of time required for Mitrāvasu's love mission. We might, for example, assume that his meeting with Jimūtavāhana was delayed a day by his failure to find the prince the first day, and that Malayavati's impatience at his delay 'to-day,' in the opening of Act ii., was due to its being the second day of her brother's quest. Still, as stated above, the difference in either case is but a difference of less than twenty-four hours in our interpretation of the action.
The one other important time allusion in this second act is that relating to the time for celebrating the marriage of the lovers. From the scene in the sandalwood bower Mitrāvasu himself is unquestionably convinced of the mutual love between his sister and Jarjūtavāhana. Accordingly he goes to obtain from the young prince’s Gurus their final sanction of the marriage (p. 34. 2–11). They evidently dwell quite near, and a few minutes later a maid returns with the news from Mitrāvasu that ‘the happy event of Malayavati’s wedding will be brought to pass this very day’ (ajja eva malaevadi vīdāhūśavasam māṇgalarū samvuttaṁ bhavissudhi, p. 39. 5–6). The hour of the nuptial bath has arrived, as quoted above.

Time of the second act, part either of the same afternoon as the preceding act, or of the morning following—see discussion above.

Act III.—The third act is unbroken in its movement and it is supposed to last from dawn till sunset on the day after the marriage. The wedding itself had been solemnized ‘at the first watch’ of the night (padhamapahure, p. 42. 1; consult the note on this in Brahme and Paranjape’s edition, p. 41). As Act iii. opens, it is daybreak (pahāde-vi, p. 42. 2). The marriage festivities are still being carried on, as is shown by the scene of the intoxicated parasite, Čekharaka, in the first half of the act. He had been carousing during the night’s celebration, but his sweetheart had not joined him though she had seen him (cf. raṇa-virahajñidukkantham, p. 45. 1, and ajja tuviṁ mae vīrā-hoja-garane niddāsmaṇo etc. p. 56. 1). People are stirring about as the act progresses, because the maid has received orders from the bride’s mother to direct the royal gardener specially to prepare the flower pavilion, as the bride and bridegroom will go there ‘to-day’ (ajja saṁveseṁ maṁsātavāhānuṁ sajīkaraṇi, p. 44. 13). The loving pair appear on the scene about the middle of the act, and Jarjūtavāhana, in rapture at his marriage, feels that this blessed day is the reward of all the austerities in his past life (cf. p. 52. 1–10). His comrade, the Vidūṣhaka, soon joins the couple, and Jarjūtavāhana pleasantly twits his friend on having been so long in coming (raṣaṣṇa cirād ṣyāto ‘ṣi, p. 53. 17). There are one or two allusions to the sun and to incidents connected with the festivities (p. 53. 17, p. 56. 1, p. 57. 13), but there is nothing to show that the time is rapidly advancing. Suddenly toward the close of the act we find that the hour of sunset has arrived (samprati hi parinatam ahaḥ, p. 60. 6, astam .... yāyān etc. p. 60. 9). This swiftness of movement from dawn to sunset during the development of a single act is also remarked upon by Brahme and Paranjape, p. 49–50.

Time of the third act, from dawn until sunset on the day after the wedding, which took place just after the close of the second act.

Interval? It is difficult to prove with absolute certainty that any interval elapses between the third act and the fourth, but good reasons may be given for assuming at least a few days’ break. In the first place, Jīmūtāvāhana and Malayavatī are no longer at the abode of the bride’s parents, as they were in Act iii., on the day after the wedding. There is authority for believing that it was customary for newly married couples to remain for ten days at the bride’s home before the young husband took his wife to his own abode. The sloka cited by Brahme and Paranjape,

p. 51, is worth quoting in this connection; it runs, kanyāvepmanī

nirvṛtya rājave rājave daśarūtram | subhāryah svaghrāhī yāyāt stāter vā kaludeśayoh. The play seems indirectly to contain a reference to this idea, if we may read at least an implication of it in the order given by the bride’s mother that ‘red garments are to be carried to Malayavatī and her husband for ten days’ dasarastrī yāvan malayavatījāmātu ca raktavatāsī netav-nyānī, p. 61. 10).

In the second place, the fête Dipaprati grāhā (p. 61. 19), or festival held on the first day of the bright fortnight of Kār-tika (Oct.–Nov.), upon which occasion it was appropriate to give some suitable memento to the bride and groom (cf. yat tiṣṇi cīt pratiyate, p. 62. 1) is spoken of in such a manner as to imply that this fête was not immediately after the wedding.

Then, Jīmūtāvāhana’s attitude, if one may say so, seems to imply a slight waning of the honeymoon. As he wanders with his brother-in-law down to the seashore to watch the rising of the tide, he complains that the forest life offers little opportunity to do good by self-sacrifice in behalf of others (cf. dūṣo ‘yam eko vane, etc. p. 62. 10); and a little farther on in the act when the occasion accidentally comes, he then feels that in this way his ‘marriage with Malayavatī has been fruitful’ (cf. saphalīkhatoto me malayavatāh pūpigarahaḥ, p. 75. 15). His words of reminiscence of Malayavatī’s kisses (p. 76. 18-19) do not necessarily imply that the marriage had been but a day before. On the whole, therefore, considering that the bride has left her own home and is now with her husband at the house of his parents, which we may believe customarily happened after ten days according to the authority above cited; and considering the daśarātra-allusion in the play, which seems indirectly at least to refer to this; and again taking into account the other points above noticed, it seems reasonable at least to assume that ten days or more perhaps had elapsed between the wedding and the great life-sacrifice which the hero now makes. Yet it must be noticed that Windisch, in his brief memorandum, op. cit., p. 48, allows only three days for the action of the play and does not mention any interval.

Act IV.—The movement of Act iv. itself is swift and unbroken. It occupies the short time that the hero is walking upon the slopes of Mount Malaya, where the occasion arises for him to sacrifice himself to the bird Garuḍa in order to save the life of one of the serpent race, and it includes the sacrifice itself at the close of the act when the great bird carries him off in its talons to the top of the mountain in order to kill and eat him.

Time of the fourth act, brief part of a day.

Act V.—The fifth act follows immediately upon the fourth, as Garuḍa is now seen to be devouring his victim on the mountain peak to which he had just carried him. The bird, however, relents and proceeds to restore Jīmūtavāhana to life. The hero is immediately reunited with his wife and parents; and the goddess Gāuri, who is the dea ex machina of the piece, proclaims him a universal sovereign to whom the nations bow, including his chief enemy Mātaṅga (matāṅgahātakādayo, p. 105. 5). Thus all ends well and happily.

Time of the fifth act, continuation of the same day as the preceding act.

Summary of the duration of the action of the Nāgānanda.

Act i., part of one day, forenoon until midday. 1
Act ii., part either of the same day or of the next day—see discussion above. [1]
Act iii., the whole of the next day from dawn until sunset. 1 [Interval? —— perhaps some days—see discussion above.]
Act iv., part of one day. 1
Act v., continuation of the same day. 1
Thus, the action of the Nāgānanda as presented covers three days, or possibly four—see discussion above. There is probably also an interval of some days after Act iii., as explained. Acts iv.–v. together occupy part of a day.

Conclusion. An examination of the kind made in this paper contributes something to the interpretation of the plays from the standpoint of action and to the interpretation of character development during that action. As for its general results in supplementing the previous study of Kālidāsa’s use of the element of time in his plays, the present investigation would tend perhaps to show more conservatism on the part of Harsha with regard to allowing very long lapses of time to be assumed in the action of his plays, than was the case with his greater predecessor.

Contributions to Avestan Syntax, the Preterite Tenses of the Indicative.—By Louis H. Gray, Columbia University,
New York, N. Y.

The question of the signification of the past tenses of the indicative in the Avesta is one of the most important in the study of the syntax of the sacred language of Iran. The distinctions between the imperfect, the aorist, and the perfect must be examined and the results of the investigation must ever be kept in mind if the full meaning of the Avesta texts is to be won.

The force of the tenses of the Avestan has twice been made the subject of rigid investigation, first by Bartholomae Altiran. Verb.
Spr. (1882) 491–496. The progress made in the interpretation of the Avesta since these two works appeared is a sufficient ground for a reconsideration of this problem.

The position won with regard to the force of the tenses of the Sanskrit, and especially of the Vedic dialect, is my starting point.
The doctrines taught by Pāṇini concerning the Indian tenses are as follows. The aorist expresses past time (lun, iii, 2, 110); the imperfect denotes an act performed on some day other than the present one (anadyutane lun, iii, 2, 111 as contrasted with adyatana=aorist, Vārttika 2 to Pāṇini ii, 4, 3; Vārttika 3 to Pāṇini vi, 4, 114); the perfect signifies an act performed at a time when the speaker was not present (parokṣe lit, iii, 2, 115). The conclusions drawn by Delbrück, who has given Pāṇini the tribute which is his due (Vgl. Synt. ii, 273) may be summarized briefly. The imperfect is the tense of narration (Altind. Tempusl. 90, 132, Altind. Synt. 279, Vgl. Synt. ii, 268, 309); the aorist simply states that a given act was performed, or that a given event occurred at some time past (“Es kommt bei der aoristischen 1The present paper, like its companion study, “Contributions to Avestan Syntax, the Conditional Sentence”, Annals N. Y. Acad. Sci.

xiii, 549–588, is intended to be preliminary to the forthcoming “Avesta Syntax” of my teacher, Prof. A. V. Williams Jackson. His counsel, ever cheerfully given, is highly appreciated by me, and from his rich collection of material, kindly placed at my disposal in manuscript, I have received much valuable assistance.

The views concerning the tense-force of the Avesta which were expressed by Bartholomae and Spiegel may be summed up in a few words. According to the former of these two scholars the Iranian aorist, like the Greek, expresses an inchoative or an instantaneous act (“Der iranische aorist dient, wie der griechische, zum ausdruck der eintretenden, auf einen schlag vollzogenen handlung,” Bartholomae, Altiran. Verb. 223, cf. Jackson, Av. Gramm. § 624), and he considers the imperfect to be preeminently the descriptive tense in Iranian as it is in Indian. The perfect is used, according to this scholar, in a present or in a preterite sense, or else it possess no tense-force whatever (Altiran. Verb. 237). Spiegel agrees with Bartholomae in regard to the tense-force of the aorist and imperfect (Vgl. Gramm. 491, 493), but in his view the perfect denotes either a mere preterite, or else the present result of a past act or event (Vgl. Gramm. 495). The pluperfect tense occurs very rarely in the Avesta. In Bartholomae’s opinion (Altiran. Verb. 240) it has merely the force of the ordinary imperfect. Similarly,

¹ Whitney, Skt. Gramm. ⁹ § 779, like other scholars, regarded the imperfect as the tense of narration. His theory, however, that the aorist “signifies something past which is viewed as completed with reference to the present” (§ 928, cf. also §§ 927, 929–30) is less acceptable in my judgment. The perfect, even in the Veda, was to him “the equivalent of imperfect, aorist, and present” (§ 823, cf. also §§ 821b, 822, and Pāṇini chañdāsī lid, iii. 2, 105). This conception of the force of the perfect tense seems to me to be somewhat inexact.
with reference to the Sanskrit pluperfect, Delbrück supposes that this tense is sometimes equivalent to the imperfect as being a tense of narration and sometimes to the aorist as being past in time (Vgl. Synt. ii, 228, 275–276, 309, Altind. Tempusl. 113, 132, Whitney, Skt. Gramm. §532a, cf. also Speyer, Skt. Synt. 256–257). This view does not seem to be supported by the Avesta. There, in my opinion, the pluperfect represents what we should expect from its formation in the perfect system. It appears to denote the result in past time of a previous action or event, and it does not appear to have the value of a simple preterite tense.

It is almost self-evident that the Younger Avesta shows a steady decline in ability to distinguish sharply between the various preterite tenses. This is true especially of the aorist, which is practically supplanted by the imperfect and occurs but seldom (Bar-
The decreasing frequency of the aorist and the absorption of the aoristic functions by the imperfect in epic and classical Sanskrit is closely analogous (cf. Avery, JAOS. x, 319).

In the consideration of the force of the imperfect and aorist tenses in the Avesta a considerable difficulty meets the investigator at the very outset. While the Old Persian employs the augment in all the occurrences of the imperfect and aorist, the Avesta has very few augmented forms (Spiegel, Vgl. Gramm. 343– 344, Bartholomae, Altiran. Verb. 57, 60–62; Grundr. der iran.
Philol. i, 56, 189–190; Jackson, Av. Gramm. §466). The danger of confounding true imperfects and aorists with injunctives is, therefore, a serious one. Especially is this the case in the Gāyās, the very part of the Iranian scriptures where clearness were most desirable. Here the confusion between the past tenses of the indicative and the injunctive is the greatest. Many passages of the Gāyās may be interpreted equally well either as laid by Zarathushtra in time past, or, owing to the marked eschatological spirit which pervades these psalms, as referring to future time and especially to the Resurrection. In the Younger Avesta this difficulty is, fortunately, less serious, owing to the relative simplicity of the thought and style. In all passages considered in this study which possess traditional renderings in Pahlavi and Sanskrit these ancient translations have been taken into account.

I have necessarily adopted a uniform rendering of the past tenses. The imperfect is translated in all instances by the English narrative tense ('he said'), the aorist by the auxiliary ‘did’ (he ‘did say’), the perfect and its preterite, the pluperfect, by the auxiliaries ‘has’, ‘had’, (‘he has said’ ‘he had said’).

I. Sentences containing the imperfect only.

In the following passages will be found examples of the imperfect indicative used as the tense of simple narration or description according to the theory set forth above.

Ya. 29. 8:

‘this man here hath been found for me, who alone heard our commandments, Zarathushtra Spitāma. He wisheth, O Mazda and Asha, to recite the duties when I shall give him a goodly upbuilding of speech.’

(Note the variant gušā K 37, C 1 for gušatā which Neryosengh renders by suvāna.)

Ya. 30. 6:

‘of the two the demons decided not aright, since deceit came upon them as they questioned when they chose the Worst Mind. Then they rushed together unto Wrath to defile the life of man.’

(The tradition renders višyāla by the present višnend, višijanti, but upājasat and hindvārenta by matō hōmand, upāgacchat, and dūbārast hōmand, durāgacchan.)

Ya. 31. 11:

‘when first thou, Mazda, shapedst for us lives and consciences and wisdoms through thy Mind, when thou madest the body corporeal, (when thou madest) deeds and words whereby one may at will profess his beliefs.’

(The Pahlavī and Sanskrit tradition renders taśō by tāśt, ghati-tavān, and daddā by dōt, adāh.)
Ys. 32. 1:
ähyyäcã x’ætuś yûsat ahyyä vâražōnám maț airyamnā ahyyä daêvā mahmī manōî ahurahyä urvâzentâ mazdā;
œiôi dûthwô dûhámâ tông dûrayô yôî vê daîbēšentî.
‘of him he asked as kinsman, of him (he asked) as serf together with the confederate, of him the demons (asked):
In my mind (I am) a friend of Ahura Mazda. May we be thy messengers! Them art thou to hold (in restraint) who hate you.’
(The tradition renders yûsat by bâvihûnast.)

Ys. 34. 8:
täîś zî nât šyaoanâîś byentê yaësû as pairî pourûbyô ìbyejo hyat as aøjyê nûidytôhom theahyä mazdā pêstû urvâtahyä yôî nóit aôm mâînîyatô aëîbyô dûirê vohû as manô.
‘by these deeds they affright us with whom there was destruction for many, since he was the stronger against the weaker(?), an oppressor of thy doctrine, Mazda: the Good Mind was far from them who regarded not Righteousness.’
(We may also regard mâînîyatô and as as injunctives, cf. the traditional renderings by mínênd, manîyante and barâ . . . aîtô, asti.)

Ys. 43. 8:
at hôi aojî zarâbuśtrô paourvim hâîbyô dçeëś hyat îoîyô drégväîtë at aîswûne rafinô hyûm aôjônghevat.
‘then to him I, Zarathushtra, speake: May I be a true foe, as far as I can, of the wicked, but a mighty joy to the righteous.’
(The tradition renders aojî by gûst, pratyavocat.)

Ys. 44. 6:
tat ùtwô ùrasâ oræ môî vaoçû ahurû kaëîbyô azûm rûnyô-skërvûm gûm tæsò.

‘this I ask thee, tell me truly, Lord, whether what I shall pronounce is true indeed: doth Armaïtiu advance Righteousness by her deeds? The Good Mind taught thy Kingdom; for whom shapedst thou the joy-giving cow Azi?’
(The tradition renders çimas by çâsêî, âsvûdâyati, and tæsò by tæsõ, aghatayah.)
Ys. 45. 5:

\[ \text{āt fravazēyā hydt mōi mraot sponētmō} \\
\text{vačē srūidyāí hyat marstacibyō vahišṭam.} \]

‘and I shall pronounce what the Holiest said unto me, the word which is best for mortals to hear.’

(The tradition renders mraot by ġūft, abravīt.)

Ys. 46. 17:

\[ \text{yabrā vō anfāmānī senghānī} \\
\text{nōiū anafśmām dējāmāspā hvō-gvā} \\
\text{hadā vistā vahmēng sravōkā ṛādāvēkō} \\
\text{yō vičinaot dāhīmēvā adūbūmēvā} \\
\text{danṛō mantū uāū mazdē ahūrō.} \]

‘where I shall announce your measures, not unmeasured, O wise Hvogyan Jāmāspā, prayers with your creation through obedience to the generous giver, who, even Mazda Ahura, decided between good and evil with his wise councillor Righteousness.’

(The tradition renders vičinaot by bārā vīfīnēt, vīvinaktī.)

Ys. 48. 5:

\[ \text{gavōī vērsyātūm tám nū x'arvēdī fōyō.} \]

(The tradition renders fōyō by sphiṭāyati.)

Examples of the imperfect injunctive may be quoted from the Gāthās in this connection. In the two passages here chosen the injunctive value of the augmentless imperfect form is supported by the traditional renderings. In the majority of cases, however, the decision whether a passage contains an imperfect indicative or an injunctive becomes almost entirely a matter of subjective judgment. Perhaps we may go so far as to say that the double force of the augmentless form was intended by the great Prophet, whose vivid imagination beheld the future aftertimes as the past.

Ys. 34. 9:

\[ \text{yōi spontām ārmaitīm bēahyā mazdā bōrcām viduō} \\
\text{duō-syaobanū avazāt vawhēnē vēvisū manawō} \\
\text{aśibō maś aśū syazdaṭ yavat ahmaṭ aurunā xrafastrā.} \]

‘those who know that Spenta Armaiti is beloved of thee, O Mazda, (but who) are to fall away through evil doing through ignorance of the Good Mind, from them Righteousness is to withdraw afar, as from us the wild noxious creatures (are to withdraw)."

(The tradition renders avazasaṭ by barā sedkūnyēn, parikṣep-syanti, but syazdaṭ by prabhraṣyati.)

Ys. 44. 15.

\[
\begin{align*}

kuṭrā ayā kahmāī vananām dadd. & \quad \text{kuṭrā ayā kahmāī vananām dadd.} \end{align*}

'thiss I ask thee, tell me truly, Lord: whether thou hast power through Righteousness over him to ward (him) off from me; when the two hostile hosts shall come together on account of those doctrines which thou art to desire to have maintained, unto which of the twain art thou to give the victory?'

(The tradition glosses dīdoṣō as eschatological; aēy, Dīnē rūbākṣ būndōk yekevānēt dēn sač dāmānō; kīla, Dīneh pra-vṛttiḥ sampūrṇā bhavisyati antāh tasmin kāle. It renders dadd by yeḥaḥṇā-ait, dāsyati.)

b. Younger Avesta.

The imperfect retains its original force unchanged in the younger Avesta. It has, furthermore, absorbed for the most part the functions of the aorist tense. The imperfect is very frequent in the younger Avesta. A very few examples from this portion of the texts will suffice to show the force of the imperfect in the later period of the language.

Ys. 9. 15 (YAv. verse):

vispe duēva zarabūstra.

'thou, Zarathushtra, madest all the demons to hide beneath the earth.'

(The tradition renders ākōraṇavō by kart hōmanih, akarot.)

Ys. 57. 17 (YAv. verse):

Further examples of the imperfect injunctive in Avestan are given by Gray. Annals N. Y. Acad. Sci. xii, 563, 573-574.
'who hath not slept after that the two spirits created the creation.'

'the well-born Ardvī Sūra Anāhita wore a collar upon her fair neck, she girt her waist, ... she bound on a crown, ... she clad herself in beaver robes.'

(Note the variant bandayeti—present—J 10 for bandavata.)

Yt. 8. 38 (YAv. verse):

II. Sentences containing the aorist only.

It is not altogether improbable that at an early time in the Indo-Iranian period the various formations of the aorist, such as the root-aorist, the sibilant aorist, or the reduplicated aorist, expressed different shades of the force of the aoristic tense. However this may have been, it is clear that by the close of the Indo-Iranian period all formations of the aorist had the same signification, that of the simple statement that a certain action or event occurred in past time (Delbrück, Altind. Tempusl. 88; Vgl. Synt. ii, 230).

‘now the two first spirits, the twins, of their own accord did proclaim both in thought and in word and in deed, what is better and what is evil; of them twain the benevolent did choose aright, but not so the malignant.’

(The tradition renders asrvātēm by srūt, avocatām, and viśyātā by barē vijiṭ, vibhaktavān. The use of viśyātā in Ya. 30. 6 is precisely similar, although Neryosengh renders it there by vivānāti.)

‘sseeking to magnify with our hymns of Concord him who is called in immutability Mazda Ahura, since he is Asha and Vohu Manah did promise that in his Kingdom he is Health and Immortality, in his mansion Strength and Eternity.’

(The tradition renders cōiśt by cāśū, āsvādayati.)

Ys. 46. 12:
hyat us aśā naptyaśā nafruvā tūrahvā uẕjm fryānahvā aqyavā ārmatriś gādvā frādō beaxvāshā āt ʾū vohū kim aibī-mōist manawhā ācībyā rafeśrāi mazdā sustī ahurā.

‘when Righteousness did come unto those that are to be called the children and grandchildren of the Turanian Fryāna who zealously furthereth the possessions of Ārmaiti, then the Good Mind did abide with them, (and) Ahura Mazda is announced to them for their comfort.’

(The tradition renders aibī-mōist by ketrūnd, nivasanti.)

Ys. 49. 5:
at hvō mazdā ʾīdā ʾāzūtiścā yā daēnum vohū sūrštā manawhā ārmatriś kusōṭ āśā huzōntuś ṭāścā vīpuśā beahmi zāubröi ahurā.

‘now he, O Mazda, is both increase and prosperity whosoever did guard the Religion through the Good Mind, whoever hath saving knowledge of Ārmaiti through Righteousness, together with all those in thy Kingdom, Lord.’

(The tradition glosses sūrštā by zukīmin dinō pēṯāk pavan frārūnōīh vādūnīn.)

Ys. 51. 11:
kō urvābh spitamāi zarabuśrāi nā mazdā kō vā aśā ʾafraśtā kā spentā ārmaitiś kō vā vawhūś manawhā aĉistā magāi orvōō.

‘what man, O Mazda, is a friend of Spitama Zarathushtra, or who did make questioning with Righteousness, with whom (did) Spenta Ārmaiti (make questioning), or what just man did make announcement to magnify the Good Mind.’
(The tradition renders āfraētā by hampūreītō, aprēchat.)

Ys. 53. 3:
śomā tu pourucistā haēvat-aspānā spitāmī yezīvī dugdram zarathuśtrāhē vawāhī pātyāstōm manavāhō āśahyā mazdāsētā taibyō dāt sarem ābā hēm fērāśvā thēx xrabēcē sēništā ārmaitōīī hūdānwarşēvā.

‘and him, thou Pourucista, Hācetaspian maiden, Spitamide, youthful daughter of Zarathushtra, he did give to thee as a husband, a friend of the Good Mind, Righteousness, and Mazda; then make thou questioning with thy most holy wisdom in Ārmaiti’s knowledge-choosing matters.’

The following strophe seems to contain aorist injumpunctives rather than augmentless aorists.

Ys. 51. 15:
hyaī mīdēm zarathuśtrō magawāyō cōišt parā garō dēmānē ahurō mazdē jasaī pouruyō tā vē volū manawīhū uśāicī savāiš čevīšī.

‘this reward Zarathushtra did promise in the presence of the great ones: In the Abode of Song Ahura Mazda is to be the first to come; these things have been taught you by the Good Mind and by the blessings of Righteousness.’

b. Younger Avesta.

It has already been noted that the aorist occurs but rarely in the Younger Avesta. Its place has been usurped for the most part by the imperfect.

Ys. 19. 1-3 (YAv. prose):
cīt avat vacō ās ahura mazda yat mē frāvaocō para asmēm para ārīm para zām . . . uat mēnət ahurō mazdē ṣaγhē ās ahunahē vairyehe spitāmē zarathuśtrē yat ī frāvaocēm.

‘what was that word, O Ahura Mazda, which thou didst pronounce to me in the presence of the heaven, in the presence of the water, in the presence of the earth? . . . then said Ahura Mazda: It was this portion of the Ahuna Vairya, O Spitama Zarathushtra, which I did pronounce unto thee.’

(The tradition renders frāvaocē by yemālēnē, prāvocaḥ. The use of frāvaocēm in Yt. 17. 22 is precisely similar.)

1 It is to be noted that in Avestan as well as in Sanskrit the aorist stem vacē voc has assumed the value of a secondary root.
Yt. 3. 2 (YAv. prose):

mrūṣi bā vaçō arñ-vacō ahura mazda yatha te aśvañ yâ tā asa vahīšta frōdāhīś.

'speak words truly spoken, O Ahura Mazda, as they were for thee when thou didst create through Asha Vahishta.'

Yt. 24. 20 (YAv. prose):

imañ uṣēm vacō fravaocēt yatha yat tō fravaocēma.

'this spoken word may he pronounce as we did pronounce it to thee.'

Vd. 2. 31 (YAv. prose and verse):

āt mōsta yimō kuba tē

azōm varēm karṇavaṅe
yâ mē aoxta ahūrō mazdē.

'then Yima did think: How shall I make thy enclosure as Ahura Mazda said unto me.'

(The tradition renders mōsta by mūni.)

Vd. 15. 13 (YAv. prose):

puhōm anīm narō varēta.

'this man did beget the child.

(The tradition renders varēta by varāt.)

zṣōtō nizbyavuhā zarāuṣṭra imañ ḍmaṇa yat ahurahe mazdē. varēm mē aṣqasāt zarāuṣtrō.

'do thou thyself, Zarathushtra, invoke this creation of Ahura Mazda. In my word Zarathushtra did delight.'

(The tradition renders aṣqasāt by madāmānānīštō.)

Medio-Passive Aorist 3. Sing. in -i.

The medio-passive in -i is not frequent in Avestan. A few examples may, however, be cited.

a. Gādā-Avesta.

Ys. 32. 8:

aēkam aēnawatūm vīvanhušō sraēvi yimasōt yō mātyōng čiēnušō ahmākōng gāuš bagā zāronmō aēkamōt ā ahmī thwahmī mazdā vīvīdō aiōp.

'of these sinners even Yima, the son of Vivanhush, hath been accounted one, who (although) seeking to please our men, ate portions of the Cow; apart from these men am I in thy judgment hereafter, O Mazda.'

(The tradition renders sraēvi by sruē, proktavān. Cf. also Ys. 45. 10; 53. 1.)

Ys. 36. 6 (GAv. prose):

sraēkštam at tōi kēhrpām kēhrpām āvācdayamahi mazdā ahurā imā raoēcē bāreziētōm bāroziēnanēm avat yēt hvarē avācē.

'the most beautiful body of bodies we acknowledge to be thine, O Mazda Ahura, this I ask thee, tell me truly, Lord: How through Righteousness shall I merit that reward, ten mares with foal and a camel, since, O Mazda, there hath become known to me Health and Immortality, that thou shalt give these twain of thine.'

(The tradition renders apivaiti by xavitūnam, vedmī.)

b. Younger Avesta.

Yt. 8. 48 (YAv. prose):

yim vispāēs paitišmyurante yāīī spēntehe mainyušē dāmān asairi-zmāēka upairi-zmāēka yāca upāpa yāca upasma yāca ašaṃō stīā āīdē.

upon whom all the creatures of the Holy Spirit think, both those below the earth and above the earth, below the waters and in the earth, winged and far-ranging, and all that which beyond these boundless and eternal things is called the world of the righteous.'

Yt. 19. 92–93 (YAv. verse):

\begin{align*}

yat drō tainigāuṇ jaini \\
yim \text{ barāt kuva haosrava} \\ yat tūrō jaini frauvarse.
\end{align*}

‘that Victory which the sturdy Thraētaona bore when Azhi Dahāka was slain, which the Turanian Frāuvarse bore when the wicked Zainigāuṇ was slain, which King Haosravah bore when the Turanian Frāuvarse was slain.'

III. Sentences containing the perfect only.

The perfect seems to retain its original force unchanged in Avestan. It expresses the present result of a past action or event. No assistance in determining the value of the perfect tense is given by the traditional renderings in Pahlavi and Sanskrit. The meagre verb-system of the Pahlavi precludes an accurate translation of the Indo-Iranian perfect, and the Sanskrit

1 The Old Persian has two examples of the medio-passive in -i, athaḥy and adāri, adārīy. Both these words seem to be used with the force of the imperfect, the tense with which they are significantly coordinated in the inscriptions. NaRa 20–22: tyuṣām haśāma aṭaḥ[y ava a]kunau dātam tyu manā a[tī]t a dāri, ‘what was said unto them by me, that they did; this my law was maintained’ (cf. also Bh. i, 20, 23–24); Bh. ii, 89–90: utāsaīy [na]ṣma avajmā duvarayā māiy basta a dāriy haruvaśim kāra avajmā, ‘and I put out his eye; he was kept bound at my door; all the people saw him’ (cf. Bh. ii. 74–78); Bh. i, 25–26: auramadāmaiy upastām abara yāta ṣaḥa unm [a]dārīy, ‘Auramazda brought me help until this kingdom was held.’ This coordination of the medio-passive aorist in -i with the imperfect in Old Persian is the more striking in view of the careful distinction observed by this dialect between the aorist and the imperfect in all other instances (see Bartholomae, Altiran. Verb. 222, 224–226; Spiegel, Vgl. Gramm. 498).
version is based upon the Pahlavi, reproducing, in the case of the perfect tense at least, the inaccuracy of the Middle Persian translation.

a. Gādā-Avesta.

Ya. 13. 4 (GAv. prose):

iθā mainyū mamānāitē iθā vaoēatarē iθā vāvōrsvē-tarē.

‘thus the two spirits have thought, thus they have spoken, thus they have done.’

(The tradition renders mamānāitē by mīnām, manye; vaoēatatarē by yevealēlinam, samuccarāmi; vāvōrsvēatarē by varzam, samāccarāmi.)

Ya. 28. 9:

anāīš ə νोiθ ahurē mazdā ašmēcā yānāiś saranaēmā manaseē hēyat vahistam yōi vī yōīmē dasamē stūmam yūēm zvēstēvēhō iθō zvēhrēcēcā savāvēhēm.

‘by these boons may we not anger thee, O Ahura Mazda and Righteousness and the Good Mind, we who have been zealous in the giving of praises; ye are friendly and the Kingdom of wish and of blessings’ (i.e. the blessed, wished-for Kingdom).

Ya. 29. 4:

mazdā sāzārē mairīdō yē zī vāvōrsvēi pairī-ciēti daēvātēkē maŋyālēcē yācē vārσnāitē aipī-ciēti hō vēvērē ahurē adhē nō awhat yabē hōvē vaat.

‘Mazda of words is most mindful which have been done aforetime both by demons and men and which will be done hereafter; he is the deciding lord, so be it unto us as he is to wish.’

(The tradition renders vāvōrsvēi by varzēt, acārītēni.)

Ya. 32. 15:

anāīš ō vī-νōnāsē yē karapōsēcē koviōsēcē anāīš aibē yōŋ dainī νōiθ jyōūsē xēyamēnēng vaso tōi ābyē bairvēntē vawēhōsē dēsmānē manashē.

‘In accordance with those doctrines, there hath perished both the Karapship and the Kaviship; in accordance with these (doctrines, however) they whom (the wicked) make not masters of (their own) life at will shall be borne by the two [Haurvatāt and Ameretāt] to the home of the Good Mind.’

Vol. xxi.
(The tradition renders vi-ninâsā by barâ aû滨4 yehevûnd.)

Ys. 33. 10:

viûwâ stôi hûsîtûyô yâ zî ã ú hârô yâsçâ hêntî yâsçâ mazdâ bavâintî bêahmi â bâs zaoû zaoxôhvâ vohû uzêyû manavôhû zôbrû aûdû uûtû tanûm.

'all blessings of life in the world which have been and which are and which are to be, distribute these, O Mazda, in thy love, increase our body in health through the Good Mind, the Kingdom, and Righteousness.'

(The tradition renders dîhare, hêntî, and bavâintî by bûz hômând, sambhûthâ santi; am hômând, santi; and am yehevûnd [min kevan frâz, bhavisyanti respectively.)

Ys. 34. 5:

kat vê zôahrûm kû uûtû sêyânhûnû mazdâ yabû vû hahmi aûvû manavôhû drûyôîlyûi drijûm yûsmakûm parô vû vispûîî parô vaoxmû daceûîscû zrafastrûîs mahyûsçû.

'what is your Kingdom, what your power to do, O Mazda, as I implore, to protect your poor through Righteousness and the Good Mind? we have exalted you in the presence of demons, brutes, and men.'

(The tradition renders parô vaoxmû by pês gûst hômânêz, prâk ukûtû stha.)

Ys. 39. 2 (GAv. prose):

aûânâm ânt urûnû yazamaîde kudô-zûtanûncû narmûcû nîrî-mânûcû yazûm vahehiû duaûnû vanâintû vû vêngûn vû vaoarô vû.

'and we worship the souls of the righteous whenssoever born, both men and women, whose good religions are either conquering, or are to conquer, or have conquered.'

Ys. 44. 13:

tat dîwâ perfû erô môr vaovâ ahûrâ

'this I ask thee, tell me truly, Lord: How shall we drive the Druj from us down upon those who, full of unbelief, care not for Righteousness following it, nor have they taken delight in the questioning of the Good Mind.'
Ys. 49. 1:
\[ \text{at mā yava hindaḥ pafrē masiśто}
\quad yō dukšorūriš čizēnuā asā mazdā
\quad vauhi ūḍā gaiḍi mōi ā mōi arapā
\quad ahyā vohū aosō vidā manawhā. }\]

'how long now hath the mightiest Bendva held me in combat, me who am desirous, O Mazda, to please the evil hosts through Righteousness! Come to me with a good gift, give me joy, compass his death through the Good Mind.'

Ys. 50. 1:
\[ \text{kaṭ mōi urvā isē cahyā avanḥō}

'verily my prayer is (lit.: in my prayer): What power hath my soul had over any help, what man hath been found as protector for my herd, what one for me other than Righteousness and thee, O Mazda Ahura, and the Best Mind?'

(The tradition renders isē by avāstuḥ hōmanam, abhilāṣayāmi.)

Ys. 51. 8:
\[ \text{at zī toī vau∀yā mazdā viduśe zī nā mruyāt
\quad ēyāt akōyā drogāvāt uśā yō aṣm dādrē
\quad hvo zī mqrā śyātō yō viduśe mruvātō. }\]

'then verily shall I say unto thee, O Mazda, for a man should speak unto the wise, what is woe to the wicked is weal to him who hath upheld Righteousness, for he hath peace through the Word who speaketh unto the wise.'

(The tradition renders dādrē by dhārayet.)

b. Younger Avesta.

The original force of the perfect is retained in general unchanged in the Younger Avesta as well as in the Gāthās. In the latest portions of the Younger Avestan texts, however, the peculiar force of the perfect is in great part lost, for the perfect, like the aorist, becomes at times almost equivalent with the imperfect. The perfect occurs quite frequently in the Younger Avesta.
L. II. Gray,

Ys. 1. 1 (YAv. prose and verse):

nivačdayemi hankārayemi dábuśō ahurahe mazdā...
yō no dáša yō tataša
yō tuhrūyē yō mainyūš spēntōtinō.

‘I announce, I offer unto the creator Ahura Mazda,... who hath created us, who hath fashioned us, who hath nurtured us, the Spirit most holy.’

(The tradition renders dáša by dātō hōmanam, dadān; tataša by tātēt hōmanam, ghatayūmāsa, and tuhrūyē by parvarō hōmanam, pratyapālayat.)

Ys. 8. 2 (YAv. prose):

xārata narō aitśm myazlśm yōi dim hawāna atāda frōrštīdu.

‘eat, O men, this oblation, ye who have merited it both through righteousness and through piety.’

Ys. 9. 1 (YAv. verse):

kō narā ahī
yin azm vēspahe anāhīni astotō svaśām dādarēsa xāhe gayehe xanvutō amūsāhe.

‘who art thou, O man, the most beautiful of all the material world that I have seen with thy glorious, immortal life?’

(The tradition renders dādarēsa by xāśūnēt, dādarē.)

Ys. 10. 12 (YAv. verse):

ā tē bačkāsa irirābārē
vawōhiś manawōhō mayābyō.

‘for thee through the arts of the Good Mind remedies have mingled.’

(The tradition renders irirābārē by gūmāi, arogyayukto ‘si.)

Ys. 62. 7-8 (YAv. verse):

vēspačbyō sastim bārāiti ātārō mazdā ahurahe yučbyō ām ḥam-pačāite zāfniṃci sāirinūci...

vīspaṇtīm pāra-cārentūm
ātārō zuṣta ādīdāya.
'unto all the Fire of Mazda Ahura beareth proclamation for whom he is wont to cook [iterative subjunctive] the evening and the morning meal,... the Fire hath looked upon the hands of all that pass by.'

(The coordination of the present and perfect in this passage is noteworthy. The tradition renders ādīṣya by nikrī.)

Ys. 65. 9 (YAv. verse):
\[ kubra vācō aoī-bāta \]
\[ yē hē ēaixe aībra-paitīś. \]

'what becomes of the words which the teacher hath taught him?'

(The tradition renders vāixe by vāśēt.)

Ys. 71. 10 (YAv. prose):
\[ više te ahūr mazdā hñapō vanuhiē dūmēn aṇuonīē yazamā-\[ ēde yāiś dādēba pourūnī voluwa. \]

'all thy good, righteous creations we worship, 0 beneficent Ahura Mazda, which thou hast created both many and good.'

(The tradition renders dādēba by yehubōntō.)

Yt. 10. 79=81 (YAv. verse):
\[ yō raōnū daīše maṇiham \]
\[ yahmūi raōnū darṣyāī haasdrūi \] \[ frābuva māna-iainām. \]

'who hath given Rashnu (sic!), an abode to whom Rashnu hath conveyed a home for long companionship.'

Yt. 17. 17 (YAv. verse):
\[ kō ahi yō mām zbayehi \]
\[ yeśhe azam frūṣyā zhayentym \] \[ snaśinm susṛyye vaiēm. \]

'who art thou that invokest me, whose voice I have heard as the most beautiful of those that invoke me often.'

Yt. 19. 8 (YAv. prose):
\[ yavāt anu aīpi āite garayō viştāra vīṣpom anav aīpi \]
\[ draonō bañat abaurumāva ṛahumāva vāṣṭryāīva ṛṣyente. \]

'as far as those mountains have extended, all that distance one is to present a cake both to the fire-priest and to the warrior and to the thrifty husbandman.'
Yt. 22. 8 (YAv. prose):

kudādāim vātō vāiti yim yava vātēm nāwhābya hubaoišītomēm jīyaurva.

"whence bloweth the wind, which is the sweetest wind I have ever breathed with my nostrils?"

(The tradition renders jīyaurva by vaxdūnt. See also Yt. 22. 28.)

Vd. 4. 46 (YAv. prose):

ham-tapītbyō aiyō vāxra re narobyō zarabhūtra mā gīū mā vastrane hatō abātim voovōit.

"before the heated waters (which) they have made for men, O Zarathushtra, one should not say aught unlawful of that which is kine or clothing."

(The tradition renders vāxra re by kartar-āk.)

Vd. 5. 4 (YAv. prose):

yezīca eci nasādō ... naram āstryeinīm əwhāt išarē-kāitya mē vispō asuē astē išanm jīt-əkōm xraodat-urvō poō-tanūs frōna ḫām nasūnum yē paiți āyu zamā irīrīdārē.

"if these corpses shall defile man, ... straightway (will or would be) all my material world desiring the destruction of righteousness, with hardened soul and damned, through the multitude of those corpses which have perished on this earth."

(The tradition renders irīrīdārē by vaṭiṇiṭ.)

Vd. 6. 32 (YAv. prose):

aishāt āpo para-hincaeyo yat vē naemēm yat vē brīśum yat vē caresītum yat vē pawtanhu yezī tūtavā naūt tūtavā.

"of that water should they sprinkle either a half, or a third, or a quarter, or a fifth, according as he hath been able or hath not been able."

(The tradition renders tūtavā by tūbānik.)

Vd. 8. 97 (YAv. prose and verse):

kat tā nara yaoīdāyām awhem ašūm ahura mazā yā nasūnum ava-hīṣṭa.

"can those men be purified, O righteous Ahura Mazda, who have touched a corpse in a distant place in the wilderness?"

(The tradition renders ava-hīṣṭa by barā yekavimīnēt. The parallel passage Vd. 8. 33 has the imperfect ava-hīštāt, although here also L 2, Br. 1, K 10 have the perfect hīṣṭa.)
Vd. 14. 4 (YAv. prose):

ḥpam-irista aiayah urvarayāh yā vaoce hadānaipāta.

‘mingled with that plant which is called Hadhānaipāta.’

(Note the variant reading vācī K 1 for vaoce. The tradition renders vaoce by guft. The same use of the perfect vaoce is found in Yt. 10. 88; 13. 152; 14. 55.)

Vd. 21. 2 (YAv. prose):

yayata dunna yayata frā-āpom nyāpom upa-āpom haz-aunro-vārayō baunars-vārayasīt.

‘the cloud hath come, hath come, to the water above, the water below, the water beneath, with a thousand drops, with ten thousand drops.’

Frag. Tah. 24–26 (YAv. prose):

tanu-mazō aṣayātī yō tanu-mazō biraosat (read draoṣat) tanu-mazō zī aṭyanncit aṣayāt pfrē yō noīt yava mībō mamne noīt mīdō vavača noīt vavačzā.

‘he merits a tanu-mazah who deceives (to the amount of) a tanu-mazah, for he who hath never thought deceit, nor spoken deceit, nor done deceit, hath gained as much merit as a tanu-mazah.’

The tradition renders pfrē by ambārīt, mamne by mīnūt, vavača by guft, and vavačzā by kurt.)

Frag. Tah. 105–106 (YAv. prose):

noīt hāu ās vaoze zaradvaśtā noīt ahmūt vaṇaṭa yō noīt aṣaha vahaštaha borsī frunaraśte māyā vaoze.

‘neither hath this body advanced, O Zarathushtra, nor is he ever to advance, who hath not advanced the arts of Āsha Vahishta lovingly studied.’

(The tradition renders vaoze by vāzunīr.)

Nir. 19 (YAv. prose):

dahmō dahmāi aoxe frā mā nans gārayōiś yat ratuś fritiś āsāt visāti dom frayārayō noīt frayārayeṣṭi aēṣō ratufriś yō fajārā.

‘the pious saith to the pious: Awake me, O man, that the master of satisfaction may come. (If) the awakening cometh to the one, (but the other) awakeneth not, he satisfieth his master who hath awakened.' (See Bartholomae, IF. v. 471–372.)

The perfect is used very rarely with injunctive force in the Younger Avesta.

Yt. 13. 150 (YAv. prose):

paoiyana taivyī yazamaide nānānām ā nānām ā vantunām ā dakhunām ā yōī ḫwārī ... yōī bāvarī ... yōī henti.

'the first faithful we worship who have been both in the houses and in the villages and in the tribes and in the countries, ... who are to be (?) ... who are.'

IV. Sentences containing the Pluperfect only.

The pluperfect is extremely rare in Avestan (Jackson Av. Gramm. § 602, Bartholomae Grundr. der iran. Philol. i, 89, 198). Its occurrence in Avestan is scarcely frequent enough to enable us to determine whether it still retained what would seem to have been its original value, the expression of the result in past time of a prior action or event, or whether, like the Sanskrit pluperfect (see above p. 113–114) it simply denoted preterite time.

a. Gāthā-Avesta.

Ys. 32. 6:

pourū-aṁ ṣnāxsṭā yāiś srāvahyelī yezi tāiś aḥā hātā-maṛāṁ aḥurā vahistā vōiśā manavahā vēahū vō māzdā zēbrōī ašūvā sīnghū vīdām.

'the sinful man had perished through the very things by which he will be heard of, if so be; through the Best Mind thou knowest, O Lord remembering what things soever are, I am to act in thy Kingdom as your preacher, O Mazda and Asha.'

(The tradition renders ṣnāxsṭā by ākānksate. The verse is obscure and the rendering doubtful.)

Ys. 51. 12:

nōīt tā im xēnāus uāpyūī kevinī perstō zemō zarabuṣṭrum spitāmom hyāt ahni ur āraost aṣō hyāt hōi im vāraṭasēc aosterēcē zōišsēv vāzā.

'nor did the heretic vaēpya delight him, Zarathushtra Spitāma, in the depth of winter, since he had prevented him from being with him when there came upon him the fierceness and strength of the cold.'
(Read zimō for zemō with Pt 4, J 3, 6, Jm 1, P 6, Ml 1, and the tradition.)

b. Younger Avesta.

Yt. 19. 68-69 (YAv. verse):

\begin{quote}
haçaïti dim aspahe aofô ...
abra pašcaïta va aozirms báoïntô kâsm tarâmômça báoïntô ootâm urvâxômça.
\end{quote}

'the strength of a horse attendeth him, ... thereafter had come those knowing hunger and thirst, those knowing cold and heat.'

V. Sentences containing the Imperfect and the Aorist.

Thus far we have considered passages which contain only a single one of the preterite tenses, but the distinctions already set forth with regard to the imperfect, the aorist, and the perfect become still more clear when different past tenses stand side by side in the same sentence. The presence of the imperfect, the aorist, and the perfect side by side in the same Gāthic strophe is not to be regarded, in my judgment, as a sign of syntactic decay. In the Younger Avesta, on the other hand, the various preterite tenses may be coordinated, as a natural result of the gradual loss of perception of the original difference between the past tenses of the indicative.

a. Gāthā-Avesta.

Ys. 29. 9:

\begin{quote}
atâ gūnâ urvâ raoïtâ yî anačôm xzhômô nûdôm vâôm nureh arûrahû yûn â nasîni isô xzâbêrim kadâ yavâ kvô awhat yô hôi dadaî zastavat avô.
\end{quote}

'And then the Soul of the Kine waited: I who did gain for my wretched self the impotent voice of a cowardly man, when I long for one sovereign according to his will; when shall he be who is to give me mighty help?'

(The tradition renders raoïtâ by garzitô, krândati.)

Ys. 31. 7:

\begin{quote}
yasôtâ man tô pourûô raovôshô rûthien xôbrô kvô zrahôô dëmiô ašûm yû dûra yat vâhištêm manô tû macô하였다 uzôû yô â nûrômô uhrô hamô.
\end{quote}

'who first did think to fill these glorious spaces with light, he through his wisdom is the creator of Righteousness, whereby he sustained the Best Mind; through this spirit thou increasedst, O Mazda Ahura, who art the same even until now.'
(The tradition renders ḏṝrayāṭ by yasāṃnumiṣṭ, dadāu, and uvāyō by vāsēṇīṣṭ, vikācayat.)

Ys. 32. 2:
acībyo mazdā ahurō sārymnō vohū manavhā viṣṭārā ṣaḥā paitī-mraoṭ aṣā ṣuṣu-aḥā ṣvīṃvātā spōṃtāṃ vā ārmaīūm vavuhīṃ varṇmaīḍī hā no aṣḥat.
‘to them Mazda Ahura, being lord with the Good Mind, replied from the Kingdom with the goodly fellowship of glorious Righteousness: We did choose for you (ethical dative) the good Spenta Ārmaiti, may she be ours!’
(The tradition renders paitī-mraoṭ by gūṣṭ, abravīṭ and varṇmaīḍī by dōṣīṃ, mitrayāṃi.)

Ys. 34. 13:
im adevānṃ ahurā yīṃ mōi mraoṣ vavhūnī manavhō dēṅt saoṣyantōm yā hū-karstā aṣuṣī ṭuvāṃṣat hyaṭ cīvištā huddhīyō mīṃṃ mazdā yehyā tū dabōṃ.
‘that way of which thou, Lord, spakest to me as being that of the Good Mind, that of the religion of the Soshyants, whereby deeds well-done in accordance with Righteousness are to grow, since one did teach to the benevolent the reward of which thou, Mazda, art the deposit.’
(The tradition renders mraoṣ by yemalēṇāṅi, and cīvištā by cāṣīṭo, āṣvādayāḥ.)

Ys. 43. 11:
spōṃtām at bha mazdā mōṅghī ahurā hyaṭ mā vohū pairī-jasāt manavhā hyaṭ zēmā uzē̄iś ēddai ṣuṣ paōruvīṃ sādṛā mōi sā sahīyānī zaraṇḍāīiṇī tat vavṛsveldhīyāi hyaṭ mōi mraotā vahīṣṭāṃ.
‘then I did think thee to be holy, O Mazda Ahura, when the Good Mind came unto me, when first I learned through your words—I, hard, did he announce unto me, is holding fast the faith among men—to do that which ye said unto me is the best thing.’
(The tradition renders mōṅghī by minīt homanīk, amaṅṣṭhāṅk; pairī-jasāt by bārā maṭī, samūgačchāt; ēddaimō by nikēśūṅ; sā and mraotā by gūṣṭ, avocāt.)
Contribution to Avestan Syntax.

Ys. 46. 7:

"When the wicked sought to hold me to sin, whom appointed man as a protector of one like me, other than thy Fire and Mind, through whose deeds Righteousness did prosper, O Lord? Pronounce to me that wise knowledge of the Religion."

(Note the variant didarštā F 2, H 1 for didarštā. The tradition renders dadāt by yehabānt, dattāh; didarštā by dadhāt, and braostā by fravarēm, pālayām.)

Ys. 47. 3:

"Of that spirit thou art the holy one hereby, who pleasure-bestowing fashioned for us the joy-giving Cow, and Ārmaiti for her pasture, when it [the Spirit] did hold questioning, O Mazda, with the Good Mind."

(The tradition renders hōm-tašat by hamtašit, samāšit, and hōm-braostā by saṅcīśit.)

Ys. 49. 4:

"Those who augmented wrath and violence through their folly, with their own tongues, being thriftless among the thrifty, whose evil deeds did have no pleasure because of good deeds, they (are) in the house of the demons (?) through the religion of the wicked."

(The tradition renders varodān by vārit yekavimunīlō, varṣantah sānti, and vṛṣī by vāṅcitāh. The last two lines are obscure and the rendering doubtful.)
b. Younger Avesta.

Ys. 9. 13 (YAv. verse):

ḥā ahmāi aśīr əṙənəvī
tat ahmāi jasāṭ əyaptom yat he tūm uszayawha tūm əṙəvō zarəushtra.

‘this blessing did one find for him, this boon came to him that thou wert born unto him, thou, the just Zarathushtra.’

(The tradition renders əṙənəvī by kartō, cakre; jasāṭ by maṭ, samprāpa, and uszayawha by zərzən t hōmanāi, uccārjatōt.)

Vsp. 12. 4 (YAv. prose):

humaya mainyāmāide ya daḥat ahūro mazāt ašava braošta vohu manawha vazēt aša.

‘we meditate upon the good kinds of knowledge which the righteous Ahura Mazda created, and the Good Mind did nurture, and Righteousness did increase.’

(The tradition renders daḥat by yekabun; braošta by parvar, and vazēt by vazēnīt.)

Yt. 4. 1 (YAv. prose):

azəm daḥat haurvatātō naraṃ ašaonam avāsca rafindəca braošta xidəscə avūi fraça yaomāide.

‘I created for righteous men both the helps and the pleasures and the enjoyments and the peculiar blessings of Haurvatāt, and we did confer (them) upon him.’

Vd. 2. 11 (YAv. prose and verse):

ənt yimō imṃ zəm višāvayaət avə braiśva ahmuṭ nasye-him yəba pura ahmuṭ as: tem iдра fračarenta pasvasča staoravə maṣyavə

hevam ann uṣṭəm zuoṃməca yəba kubaca he zaọsō.

‘then Yima extended this earth a third larger than it was before; there over it did go forth both cattle and small beasts and men according to each one’s will and pleasure, even as one’s pleasure was.’

(The tradition renders višāvayaət by sātənīni and fračarenta by sātən.)
VI. Sentences containing the Imperfect and the Perfect.

Sentences which contain both the imperfect and the perfect are by no means common in the Avesta. In the few passages of this category which do occur the original distinction between the two tenses seems to be observed.

a. Gāthā-Avesta.

Ys. 30. 4:

\[ \text{ašū ṣhāzə tā hīm maɪnīū jasaītōm paουrəvīm dażdī gačənča ajajāītemča yəhəvō ŋəhət ārəməm aņkəh aččītō drəgratı̄m at ašəunō vaḥištōm manō.} \]

‘and then when the two spirits first came together, they have created both life and death and how the world shall be at the last, most evil for the wicked, but the Best Mind for the righteous.’

(The tradition renders hīm jasaītōm by hám maţō hōmand, ājagmaruḥ.)

Ys. 32. 11:

\[ \text{taččīt mā mōrendōn jūtōm yōi drəgratō mazīhīč ċikōițorēś aŋhəhəcča aŋyaţitō rəצęmrəhō vəiđōm yōi vaḥištōt ašəunō məzdō rəśkəyōn manaňo.} \]

‘these destroyed my life who have taught the wicked especially to rob house-holders, both women and men, of the attainment of their inheritance, that they may make the righteous apostate from the Best Mind.’

(The tradition renders mōrendōn by marenčiňnō yekabünd, vināpăn dadate, and ċikōițorēś by kashmīnd, dəćrunt.)

b. Younger Avesta.

Ys. 9. 5 (YAv. verse):

\[ \text{yimahe xšahtre anrvehe} \\
\text{nōiň uotom hənha nōiŋ guršmōm} \\
\text{nōiŋ zuurra Əwhə nōiŋ məɾəgyək} \\ \text{nōiŋ arəskō daţō-datō} \\
\text{paŋwə-沮a fräćarōiθe} \\
\text{pita púdras̱a rədərəx̱a katarās̱it.} \]

‘in the reign of princely Yima there hath been neither cold nor heat, there hath been neither age nor death, nor disease created by the demons; father and son went forth fifteen years old each in figure.’
(The tradition renders ānha by yehavūnt, āsīt, and fraśaṛōīhe by frāz sūtunīḥ hōmand, pracarataḥ. See also the parallel passage Yt. 15. 16.)

Yt. 13. 90 (YAv. prose):

yō paoiryo stōiḥ astvaībyāt vācīṁ aoxta vīdōyum ahūrōākāṅm yō paoiryo stōiḥ astvaībyāt vācīṁ framraot vīdōyum ahūrō-ākāṅm yō paoiryo stōiḥ astvaībyā vīspāṁ daśvō-dātem vavača ayesnym avahmyam.

'who first of the material world spake the word against the demons, belonging to the faith of Ahura, who first of the material world proclaimed the word against the demons, belonging to the faith of Ahura, who first of the material world had declared all (the world) created by the demons to be unworthy of worship or of prayer.'

(The perfect vavača is coordinated in this late passage to the imperfects aoxta and framraot.)

VII. Sentences containing the Aorist and the Perfect.

Sentences which contain both the aorist and the perfect are extremely rare. A few examples, however, may be cited.

a. Gāthā-Avesta.

Ys. 34. 3:

at tōi myazdām ahūra nemañhā aśāīcā dāmā gacē vīspāt ā zābrōi yō vohā frāośtā manañhā ārōi zi huñtuhō vīspāiš mazdā xēmāvasū savū.

'now unto thee, O Ahura and Asha, we are to offer with homage the oblation, (namely) all beings in the Kingdom which ye did nurture through the Good Mind, for the weal of the beneficent hath been fitting in all respects for those like unto thee, O Mazda.'

Ys. 44. 20:

ōībōi mazdā huñkhafrā dācvā nāharī at ıt persā yōi piśyeintī aḫibiyō kām yāīš gān karapā usīxāv aśōmāi dātā gāvā kavā amīcē urūdōyātā nōīt hīm mizīn asā vāstrīm frādaiēkē.

'have the demons been good rulers, O Mazda? Now this I ask: What (vengeance shall be) to those who oppress, through whom the Karap and the Usij did give the Cow unto Wrath, and through whom the Kavi is a sinner forever, and not a man to prosper the pasture through Righteousness in watering it.

(The strophe is obscure and the translation doubtful. The tradition renders ąxharə by yehevənt həmand, abhavan and dātə by yehebənt.)

VIII. Sentences containing the Aorist and the Pluperfect.

Sentences which contain both the aorist and the pluperfect are excessively rare. A single example, which is not free from ambiguity, may be quoted.

Yaś 53. 1:
vaḥišča iśtā sravī zarauštrahē spitamahyā yezi hōi dāt āyuptā aśāt hocā ahorā mazādī yavāī vispāi ā hruasahēm yārī hōi dəbən saṣṭam cā dənəyঃ vəhṇyā uzhō səyənuhācā.

'the best wish is to be called Zarathushtra Spitāma's if Ahura Mazda in accordance with Righteousness is to give the boons, even a happy life for all eternity, to him and to those who did desire (?) and had become learned in the words and deeds of the good religion.'

IX. Sentences containing the Imperfect, the Aorist, and the Perfect.

The Gābās furnish one example of an Avestan passage which contains the imperfect, the aorist, and the perfect side by side.

Yaś 29. 1:
xəmaibyā gōnd urvā gəraḍdā kəhmāi mā thwarəzdūm kī mā taṣət
ə mā ačəmō həzasərt romō əhiśəyə deserēcā terišcə nōt mōi vəstā xəmət anyō abā mōi əsət vohō vəstryā.

'to you the Soul of the Kine did wail: For whom did ye create me, who shaped me? Wrath and Violence, Mutilation, and Outrage, and Power have bound me; no husbandman is there for me but you; so announce to me good pasture.'

(The tradition renders gəraḍdā by garṣēt, krandati; thwarəzdūm by barehniṭ həmomən, avinirmət 'smi, and taṣət by təsiḥ həmonəm, ghaṭitə 'smi.)
The conclusion which I draw from the study of the syntax of the preterite tenses of the Avesta has already been shadowed forth. In the Gāthās the tenses retain their original significations unchanged, while the Younger Avesta shows a steady degeneration of feeling for the primary distinctions between the preterite tenses. The imperfect in the Gāthās is the tense of narration, as it is in the Younger Avesta. The aorist is not uncommon in the Gāthās, where it denotes an action or event occurring at some undetermined past time. It is found very seldom in the Younger Avesta, where it has become to all intents equivalent to the imperfect. The perfect in the Gāthās expresses the present result of a past action or event. It still retains this force in general in the Younger Avesta, although cases are not lacking, especially in late portions of the text, where the perfect, like the aorist, has degenerated into a mere narrative tense. The two points in which I differ most from results hitherto obtained are in regard to the pluperfect and to the medio-passive in-i. In my opinion the pluperfect expresses the result in the past of an action or event whose time was still more remote. In other words, the pluperfect is a true preterite perfect, not a preterite present. I have suggested that the medio-passive in-i lost its aoristic force as early as the Iranian period and became equivalent to a simple preterite tense.\footnote{For the transcription employed in this article, see the editorial note at the end of the volume.}

Vol. xxii.
The term "dharma," in the context of law, refers to the moral and legal obligations of a person. The term "auऽhāhā" is used to denote the act of giving. This term is often used in the context of payment and refers to the legal means of obtaining what is owed. The term "auऽhāhā" is also used in the context of paying debts and referring to the legal means of getting a creditor paid. The term "auऽhāhā" itself is indefinable.

The practice of seizing the door to the property of a debtor, as mentioned in the law book of Apastamba, is recognized in the works of the same author's list. In the context of the law of suicide by burning, the term "auऽhāhā" is used to denote a debtor's non-payment, and following about, "auऽhāhā" is further explained.

The practice of a debtor's eviction from his property is first noticed in the law of Apastamba, and in The Academy, 12 Sept., p. 87. See also Ramanuj, "sādāntikāsāl," 1897, p. 76 ff. The term "auऽhāhā" is also used in the context of "jusstrictum," in Par. Gph. Sūr. i. 17. 18.
According to the later law, the suitor must be a Brahman priest (Jolly, p. 318), though nothing is said on this subject in the codes just cited.

II. ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE LAW.

So much by way of introduction. In the citation of legal works hitherto made by others no illustrations have been given of the ancient practice, but only the formal statutes appertaining to it. In the following pages I give some cases of various forms of suicide for redress from what may be called historical records. I do not mean that the cases are historical in reality, for they are only epic narratives and one of them is a fable. But they are older than the cases in the Rājatarāṇīṇi, and are in so far historical as to reflect conditions which must have obtained when the two epics were composed. Their value lies in the fact that they represent not merely what is the rule according to the law-book, but what was regarded as customary. Incidentally these epic illustrations will show that prāya in the account of Bṛhaspati cannot be taken in the sense of prārthana, begging or beseeching, as some of the native expositors think (Jolly, p. 314), but is the prāya of the regular practice called prāyopaveṣana, or “entering upon death,” prāya being here, as elsewhere, exitus, a wider term in this respect than ācārīta in its meaning of “door-sitting,” the latter, however, not being confined to this, but including any obstruction, as does dharma to-day.

SUICIDE IN GENERAL.

According to Hindu law all forms of suicide are forbidden. Thus in Manu v. 89, and Yājñavalkya iii. 6, the ātmātyāgīn, “self-abandoner,” is one to whose spirit no oblations may be offered, or in the still stronger language of Apastamba, i. 28. 17, the “one killing himself,” ātmānam abhimanyamāṇah, is accursed, abhīṣastah, like a murderer. Similarly Gāutama, xiv. 12, and Vasiṣṭha, xxiii. 14, ff., who mention particularly as suicides thus accursed those who kill themselves by starvation, prāya (in its usual meaning, death by fasting), weapons, fire (wood, Vas-

1 The practice of dharma to-day includes not only “door-sitting” but also any form of obstruction, for example, obstructing a water-course. Fasting is not, therefore, a necessary concomitant of dharma, though it is of “door-sitting,” dvāropaveṣanam.
iṣṭha), poison, water, hanging (or jumping, or earth-clods, or stones, these three in Vasiṣṭha alone). Although only the first of these is of special interest, I may add that the Hindu records show that with the exception of the two last, all these forms of suicide were generally recognized. Both epics have the same formula for a woman contemplating suicide:

\[\text{visam agnīṁ jalaṁ rajjum āsthāsyे tava kāraṇat}\\]

says Damayanti, 4, 4, and her cry of despair,

"Poison, fire, water, the rope, will I undergo for thy sake," is echoed in the Rāmāyaṇa, ii. 29. 21,

\[\text{visam agnīṁ jalaṁ vā 'ham āsthāsyे mṛtyukāraṇat}\\]

"Poison, fire, or water I will undergo for the sake of death;" while the latter epic adds "the rope" a little later, as if it were a customary mode of death: \[sā tvam agnīṁ praśita vā . . rajjum baddhavā 'tha vā kaṇthe, R. ii. 74. 33, \] "Such (an evil woman art thou) do thou enter fire or bind the rope about thy neck."

So in R. iii. 45. 36 ff.: "If I be deprived of Rāma, I will enter the Gṛiḍhavari, or noose myself, or abandon my body on a cliff, or drink sharp poison, (or) enter fire, but never will I touch another man after Rāma." 3

These forms are for women. Death (murder?) by drowning occurs in the case of Kahoḍa, who being defeated in argument, \[vāde,\] was drowned, \[apsu nīmājitaḥ,\] by his opponent, M. iii. 132. 15, which I cite because it is possible that he drowned himself in despair. So Ihaṅsā and Ṛīmāhākā drowned themselves in the Jumna for love of each other, M. ii. 14. 41 ff. The women, though more apt to burn themselves on the pyre of their husbands, commit suttee by drowning also. Their suttee by fire is amply illustrated in the following passages from both epics:

"A good woman, \[sādhvī,\] follows after her husband who has died before her," M. i. 74. 46.

1 Without this form in M. xiv. 69. 9, \[bhakṣayiṣye viṣam ghoram pra-

2 vekṣeṇe vā hutaṭānanam, "I will eat poison or enter fire." 3

Here the scene is intensified as compared with the simple "I will enter fire" of G. 51. 29. Peculiar to B. l. c. is \[ābandhiṣye (sc. rajjā kaṭṭham)\] without object. "Poison, hanging (here udbandhana), entering fire, fasting and sword," follow, as alternative forms. "Leaping from cliff-edges," R. v. 18. 33-34, is suggested as an appropriate means of death for a disconsolate hero and his wife and children.
"Thus speaking the queen mounted the fire-pile," M. i. 125. 31.

"What suttee (good) woman deprived of her husband could live?" Thus wailing the unhappy woman, true to her husband, entered the gleaming fire," M. xii. 148. 9–10.

These cases are from the Mahābhārata, which, however, in its older parts fully recognizes the survival of widows, cases of suttee being mentioned only in the later added books. The Rāmāyaṇa does not make the wife follow the husband," but it alludes to the practice in ii. 66. 12:

sā'ham adyāi ra' diṣṭānāṁ gamisyāmi pativrata idam carīram āliṅga pravekṣyāmi hutaścanaṁ.

"Being true to my husband I will go to death to-day.

Embracing this body (of my husband) I will enter the fire."

Also in v. 26. 7: "Fie upon me un-Āryan, not suttee, avatī, since deprived of him I live even for a moment a life that is evil."
The former passage is much expanded in the Bengal version, and the fact that no suttee takes place makes it probable that it was a conventional lament inserted after the completion of the first poem, as may be the case also with the actual suttee recorded in the first book of the other epic.1 The good widows at the end of this latter epic (also a late addition) perform suttee by drowning themselves in the Ganges, xv. 33. 21 (pativrataḥ sūdhyah).

Manu, however, does not recognize any form of suttee.

But if these cases refer only to women, not less do men commit suicide as a sacred act. Thus as at Susa, Kalanos, B. C. 324, so in the Rāmāyaṇa iii. 5, the ascetic Čarabhaṅga ends his life by burning himself and goes to heaven, though the general epic

1 Sītā enters fire to prove her purity, but this is at the command of her husband. As she is the heroine, she comes out unscathed, R. vi. 116. 27 ff.

2 The Rāmāyaṇa (perhaps late) is not lacking in passages which give the suttee sentiment. In a prakṣipta, Sugrīva’s wife Rumā will die when he dies, and Tārā also will perish through sorrow for her husband, R. v. 18. 27; while Sītā says “better to die than live deprived of Rāma,” ib. 26. 41, cēṣyo me jīvitāṁ mārtuṁ vihinaṁ yā mahātmanā. Cf. ib. 25, 26, 34. Another prakṣipta (apparently), viz. v. 28, makes Sītā, after saying that poison and weapons are lacking, prepare to hang herself with this remark: udbhūte vreyudgrathanena cīghram aham gamisyāmi Yamaśya mūlam (17). These, however, are merely sentimental outbursts, and Rāvaṇa uses the same speech when his brother is slain, nanu me maraṇaṁ creyah, etc., vi. 68. 18; while Rāma in turn is supposed to die of grief for Sītā, v. 28. 36.
rule is that "a man who kills himself, ātmahā pumān, does not go to heaven," i. 179. 20.  But even the law-book which regards suicides as accursed provides that ascetics may end their lives by starvation, Manu vi. 31. Such contradictions are common in law and epic. They spring sometimes from the antithesis of code and usage, sometimes from the inculcation of a higher ideal, as when austerity is usually said to be a sign of saintly life, but at the same time we are informed that "one who injures his body is not devout," ātmatantropaghātī yo na tapasvī na dharmavit, M. xiii. 93. 4. We need not be surprised, therefore, to learn that, though one who commits suicide by prāya is formally "accursed," this practice is approved in law and practiced by epic characters.

Suicide by Starvation.

So we approach that peculiar kind of suicide which forms the subject of this paper, according to which the creditor sets out to starve himself to death to compel payment.

But before speaking of this in detail it will be well to illustrate the fact that the formal exitus, prāya, is by no means confined to such legal use, but it is of far wider application. As I wish to distinguish the different forms of prāya, or death by starvation, I shall call the most general the first form. The verbs with which this word prāya is construed are usually ās, upa-ās, 'sit,' gam or ā-gam, upa-i or (prati-) upa-viṣ, 'enter upon,' the meaning being 'sit to death,' or 'enter upon death' (by sitting without nourishment); while upa-viṣ alone means 'fast upon.'

1. Prāya is suicide by starvation, undertaken without intent to harm and because of sorrow, or despair.

To this category belong the cases where heroes overcome in battle and no longer able to fight devote themselves to death to gain heaven. As this is considered a religious exercise, so it is in reality identical with the completion of philosophic Yoga, and is indeed called by the same name. The great saint Sita in Yoga abstraction renouncing food till he dies, his object being merely to attain salvation. This is exactly what the warrior does in the following cases, where the soldier is at the same time more or less of a sainted character (guru):

1 The female ascetic Çabarì also "burns herself (alive) and goes to heaven," in R. iii. 74. 32-33 (hurtā 'tvamānāh hufçane).
In M. vii. 198. 29–31, Bhūriçravas sits silent, munih, on the field of battle, having 'entered upon prāya,' prāyagatah, devoting himself to death. In this state he "withdraws his breath" and meditates upon holy texts, fixing his eye upon the sun, desirous of going to the Brahma-world. In other words he acts just like a Yogin, and the terms used of his act are indifferently yogayuktah (abhavan munih) and prāyagatah or prāyam upāviṣat (above and ib. 143. 33–35).

So in vii. 192. 46, Yoga is used of another hero who dies in the same way, sitting in his chariot, distressed because of his son's reported death. This man too is said to be prāyagatah as well as yogam iyivan, "entered prāya" or "entered yoga," vi. 43. 65–66. It is rather characteristic of the late seventh book that nowhere in the earlier epic is such an action called entering Yoga, and undoubtedly it was at first merely starvation or dying, without the element of mysticism given by the abstraction and prayerful attitude of the saint.

The same cause, slightly modified by failure, the sense of duty unfulfilled, and the fear of a worse death, leads the warriors in R. iv. 57. 18, to say "through fear we sit to death," bhayit prāyaṁ upāsiḍh. The cause of prāya is given in R. iv. 55. 11, as the fear of imprisonment, "than which prāyopareśāna is better," and in iv. 58. 12–13, in other words: "We must die now, for we have failed in our attempt (and fear to go back to the king), and hence to enter upon death, prāyopareśāna, is proper for us," for "we have not accomplished what we ought." "

It is clear that such cases of prāya or death by starvation involve no legal point and are only by accident, so to speak, cases of prāya. That is to say it would make no difference whether the characters here chose prāya or any other of the modes of suicide mentioned above. Their action is merely on a par with that of suicides by burning or drowning, which indeed are presented as normal alternatives. Thus in R. v. 13. 38 ff.: "If I

1 In the corresponding account at G. iv. 56. 34 and 57. 23, the simple verb is used, prāyaṁ āśyate. āśmahe. The résumé in R. v. 35. 60 has prāyaṁ upāsmahe and prāyopareśāh, with prāyopareśa (sic) in 62.

2 na kṛṣṇā kṛṣṇā, R. iv. 58. 8. At the end of R. iv. 55. 17 and 20, in preparing for this ceremony those intending to die touch water and lie on holy durbha grass (the ends of the grass pointed south), with their faces to the east. The verb here is upa-viṣ (and sam-upa-viṣ).
fail in my attempt, I will become a hermit, or raising a pyre enter the fire, or birds and jackals may eat my body after I have died of starvation in the proper way; or, for this too is a means of death recognized by the seers, I will drown myself." And so Prince Duryodhana says: "If I see these (rivals) here again I will dry myself up without water, without opposition (?); poison, hanging, the sword, entrance into fire, will I inflict upon myself, for I cannot see them successful again," M. iii. 7. 5.9

Between this general form of suicide by prāya and that to be mentioned next there is one which differs merely in respect of the cause assigned. As it is rather interesting, however, to see how the different cases lead up to the suicide with deadly motive (which is the legal form), I will separate the closely allied examples that follow.

2. Prāya is suicide by starvation, undertaken without intent to harm, but because of disgrace inflicted.

That is here accomplished which in the "death for sorrow" and "death because of fear" in the last paragraph was anticipated.
It is perhaps scarcely worth while to differentiate these cases, but they are one step nearer to the legal prāya, in that the cases under 1 are merely the result of sorrow or fear, while in both this and the legal case an insult or injury has actually been inflicted.
The suicide is not only unhappy; his honor has been affected.

Under this head comes the second threat (not fully carried out) of the same prince, Duryodhana, mentioned above, who in the Mahābhārata iii. 249. 11, 20 ff., says that he has been dishonored and will "sit to death" prāyam upāsiṣye. He then touches water, sits down upon darbha, sacrificial grass, and clothed in rags, and silent, collecting his thoughts, prepares to die of starvation;
though his friends attempt to dissuade him by telling him

1 Cl. 40, upaviṣṭasya va samyak, without prāyaṃ, showing a purely technical use of upa-viṣ as in the law-books and in the verse cited above from the other epic. The alternate text, 15. 56, has praviṣṭasya (still of the pyre).
9 punah  śroah gamiṣyāmi nirambur niravagraḥaḥ, viṣam udbhandaḥ ca'iva castram aṇipraveṣanam kariṣye. The commentator gives a var. lec. vāraṇo va navagrahaḥ (va as often for iva). Compare with this scene, ii. 47. 31; also 52. 41. With the varied reading the verse means "I will dry myself up (starve myself) like an elephant newly caught," a familiar image of grief, e. g. in R. ii. 58. 3.
that he is foolish and that "a suicide goes to hell," (251. 19; 252. 2, kasmāt prāyopaveṣanam ātmatyāgī hy adhyāyat).

It may, however, be thought that there is in this case an ulterior though hidden object of revenge (the legal notion) in the act of prāya, affecting those who had disgraced the would-be suicide. Nothing of the sort appears in the tale, and that this is not a necessary concomitant may be seen on comparing the case in the tale of the tiger and the jackal. The jackal is minister to his king the tiger, and has been disgraced without reason. Although the king discovers the mistake and wishes to reinstate the minister, the latter feels the disgrace so keenly that he persists in his design, "begs to sit to death, being grieved by the anger" (of the king), and "having sat to death, went to heaven." * Here it is clear that if the minister's intent was to harm the king he would not first have asked permission of his intended victim.

3. Prāya is undertaken as a self-inflicted punishment by one conscious of having sinned. Remorse instigates the act, but there is an additional notion that death will be an expiation. I have but one illustration, which shows that fear of punishment hereafter is the motive. In M. xii. 27. 23 ff., a king says: "Sinner that I am, āyas karah pāpah, I will sit, āsināh, here and dry up my body. Know that I have now entered death (prāya-upavistāh) in order that I may not be born in other births, a destroyer of family. I will not eat, I will not take water, I will stay here and dry up my dear life." * In the next example we come nearer to the legal aspect of the case, when suicide has an immediate motive, but still without intent to harm.

4. Prāya is undertaken from despair without intent to harm, but with intent to compel another to do one's will.

1 The first reason given is that as the cause is insufficient he makes himself ridiculous: 250. 12. prāyopaveṣaḥ in vṛppa rājasthaḥ hāvyo bhava-tiyasi. In 249. 41. upā-thā is used, trayi prāyam upāsthite. Compare prāyam upāsmahe. G. v. 32. 23.

2 In regard to the spiritual reward, it is declared in M. xiii. 7. 10, that a prāyopaveṣin "always obtains bliss," prāyopaveṣino rōjan sarvatra sukham ucyate, "just as one who lives on grass alone goes to heaven," said here of ascetic devotion.

3 The text is found in M. xii. 111. 78 and 90: tenāmarṣeṣah samāptaḥ prāyam āsītam ācchata and gomāyuh prāyam āsthāya tyaktvā dehaḥ divaḥ yaḥu.

4 Jātīṣv anyās api yathā na bhaveṣaḥ kulāntakṛt, ēṣayise prīyān prāyān iḥastho 'ham.
Illustrations are furnished at the close of the great epic war. Drāupadī thus devotes herself to death in despair and sorrow for the sake of urging her various husbands to do an act equivalent to taking a reprisal. The epic alludes to this in advance as "fasting upon her husbands," literally "besieging her husbands," where it is perhaps implied that if they suffer the queen to die they will reap the usual consequences. She continues in this state, prāyopeta, x. 16. 22, till the deed that she demands shall be done is actually accomplished. In entering into the prāya state she uses the formula ihāi 'va prāyam āsiṣyey, x. 11. 15,

"Here will I sit to death," which I call a formula because it is employed in the same words elsewhere in this epic and also in the Rāmāyaṇa, iv. 53. 19. Here is to be noticed the fact that in the preliminary in the Mahābhārata the word prāya is not used, but upa-viṣṭa, the verb (sitting against or besieging), governs the accusative in the technical sense of fasting upon (compare upa-viṣṭa as used above). This reference occurs in i. 2. 304, kṛtāmasaṅkalpa yatra bhṛtyu upa-viṣṭat, "what time she, resolved upon not eating, besieged her husbands." 1

A similar case occurs in xiv. 80. 17 and 40–41, where the queen betakes herself to prāya with the intent to persuade a favor which shall relieve her of her grief. She is accompanied in her devotion by one of her sons, who seems to "sit to death" merely through grief and despair. The queen says: "Here will I sit to death in your presence, overwhelmed with woe at being deprived of husband and a son" (unless you restore them to life). She uses the words given above, ihāi 'va prāyam āsiṣyey, and then "sitting down became silent," upāsīṇā tūṣṭiṁ āsit, which may perhaps be translated better in the technical sense "besieging became silent." Her son "touches water and becomes silent," when prāyopetaḥ, or prāyopaviṣṭaḥ, that is "when entering upon prāya." No threat of harm is here made, but, as above, may be implied. It is assumed in both these cases that it is perfectly natural for a woman thus to enter prāya, and it is in fact the same situation as that described in the Rāmāyaṇa, iii. 47.

1 In xii. 116. 10, upaviṣṭa is used of a saint not in prāya but simply fasting. The same word is current also in its literal sense of 'taking a seat' without any such connotation.
8-9, where the queen says: "If Rāma is consecrated (against my will and thy promise) I shall not eat, nor sleep, nor drink, from this day on forever, and this will be the end of my life." In R. ii. 11. 21 (compare 9. 59 ff.) this is represented as being a threat of death because of the disgrace attaching to the queen if her husband breaks his promise to her: "despised by thee, I will die to-day"; ib. 12. 47, "I will drink poison in thy presence."

There is of course no hard and fast line between these divisions. The sum of them is that an aggrieved or wretched or guilt-conscious person, whether man or woman, threatens to commit suicide by prāya as by other means with the intent to force another to do a certain thing, or, more rarely, simply to escape greater ill or atone for his sin. The former case brings us nearest to the legal aspect, where prāya is a means of compulsion.

This kind of prāya is found also in Buddhistic narratives. Thus Tissa and Raṭṭhapāla both abstain from food to get what they want, as narrated in the Vāṭa-mīga Jātaka and Raṭṭhapāla Sutta. But on this side I lack fuller information, the illustration in this paper being drawn chiefly from the epics, where I believe they are complete.

5. Prāya is undertaken by a suppliant, but it is accompanied with a threat to the effect that if the object of desire is not granted vengeance will be taken. The motive here is to excite pity, which failing, recourse is had to force.

This is illustrated by Rāma lying on sacred grass in prāya, but at the same time threatening the (god of) ocean, which in the Mahābharata version is sufficient, but in the Rāmāyaṇa the threat is carried out with an absurd account of an attack on Ocean. Here it is to be observed that the suppliant is not a priest but a warrior. The threat, however, and actual attack on the ocean-god is an epic (heroic) equivalent of the distraint which goes with the 'door-sitting.'

6. Prāya is undertaken by a suppliant, but is accompanied with the threat that if the object of desire be denied the one who rejects the suppliant will go to hell.

This is quite in accord with the view of the law-books, where the implication is clearly that the person who permits the suicide to be carried out will suffer for it hereafter. As said above, this threat may be implied in some of the preceding cases, though there is only one explicit example of this sort known to me in epic poetry. But here too it is not a priest who threatens.

In Rāmāyana ii. 21. 27–28, the queen says to her son: “If thou aban donest me, my son, I will sit to death, being unable to live, and then thou shalt go to the hell world-renowned” (known to be in store for such as slay by refusing to grant requests in such circumstances).1

7. Prāya, further (but here the word is only implied), is undertaken at the door of the house, the suppliant sitting on sacred kuśa-grass, with intent to compel submission, as in the law-books. But no violence is used, and there is no suggestion that the one affected will suffer hereafter. It is expressly said that this recourse is fitting only for a priest, and the situation is likened to that caused by a “priest robbed of his money.” The only example is in R. ii. 111. 14–17, where Rāma’s brother attempts to persuade him to return home, and to do so strews kuśa-grass before the door of the hut, takes up his position there, and says:

“I will besiege (beseech) the prince until he grants me his favor.

“Without food, not averting my eyes, like a priest that has been robbed of his possessions,

“I will lie before his hut until he (yields or) returns home.”

To which the prince replies: “Why wilt thou besiege me? For only a Brahmaṇ (priest) has a right to obstruct men, and the observance in regard to besieging is not for anointed (kings).”

1 aham prāyam ihā 'siṣye... tatas tvam prāpsyase putra nirayam loka-viṣrutam brahmahatyaṁ ivā 'dhamyāt samudraḥ saritāṁ pathiḥ. The last words refer to some Puranic legend (according to the commentator) which narrates that Ocean was once cursed by Pippalāda because of impiety to his mother. Ocean is cursed in M. xiii. 154. 7: “Once Ocean was cursed by the Brahmans and though at that time full of fresh water, became salty.” The reference in the text cited, however, would imply that Ocean was cursed to suffer the penalty of killing a priest, though the Commentator says “he received grief equivalent to the punishment of going to hell.” The alternate text, G. ii. 18. 31, has brahmaçāpaṁ ivā 'kasmāt, “received suddenly the Brahman curse.”

āryam pratypsavakeṣyāṁi yāvan me (v. 1. na for san) samprasadatāṁ, nirāhāro nirālokob dhanahino yathā dvijaḥ, caye purustāc chātāyāṁ yāvan māṁ (v. 1. na), pratiyāsyati: kim māṁ . . . pratypsavakeṣyase,
So far as I know this is the only case where the verb "obstruct," rodhati in technical application, occurs in epic accounts (the legal grha-sainrodha), though it is interesting to see that sainrodha is in ordinary epic parlance applied to obstruction of food, dhārasainrodha, R. iv. 59. 11.

These examples show that the full practice of the law in respect of dharana was recognized. The one who rejects a suppliant and compels him to kill himself, goes to hell. The only one who has a right to exercise constraint of this sort is a priest. Clearly then the practice of door-besieging is a restriction for a special cause of a practice once recognized as universal, suicide with especial intent to compel the victim of the practice to yield under pain of future punishment after death, which in turn is but one application of the still more general practice of suicide without intent to harm in cases of despair and disgrace.

Both of these practices survive in India, under the respective names of traga, that is suicide simply as a self-inflicted punishment for disgrace or failure to carry out what has been solemnly agreed to, and dharana (=dhāranā), literally a holding, capio, or in English slang a "hold up," which is restricted to a priest, and as already stated may be any form of obstruction, like obstructing the door or obstructing a water-course. These two are sometimes merged, as in the case which I reported in my Religions of India, p. 480, as occurring the year this book was written, 1894.

The man who had made himself responsible for a payment, on finding that the debtor would not pay, to expiate the disgrace slew his own mother in the presence of the defaulter, who in turn as his only expiation slew himself. On page 361 of the same work I have expressed a doubt as to whether the "door-sitting" was a very ancient practice. I presume I meant recognized in ancient tales as well as law, an observation which I herewith beg leave to cancel.

In modern times, as has been noticed by Professor Jolly in his excellent manual on Hindu Law and Custom, a looser form of dharana, known in South India as takazū, permits the creditor to institute by proxy a regular siege of the debtor’s house. Here the creditor, instead of acting for himself, hires a band of ruffians to obstruct, besiege, annoy, and threaten the life of the debtor. Some premonition of this substitution is found in the interpretation by a mediaeval commentary of Nārada's law—which, i. 122, on this subject coincides with Manu's law—whereby a son or slave may act for the creditor. The Southern takāzā is of course without any religious significance, for the debtor is simply bulldozed into paying. Professor Pischel has noticed, moreover, one other interesting phase of moral compulsion as a means of recovering debts, namely the 'charmed circle,' which in dramatic literature is drawn about a man who will not pay his gambling debts and out of which he may not step till he has settled (cited by Jolly, Recht und Sitte, p. 148).

\[ brāhmaṇo hy ekapārgyena narān roddhum ihā 'rhati (v. l. cañnas tu purāh duñc). na tu mūrāhābhīṣiktānām vidhiḥ pratypaicecane. As to the v. l. with the unnecessary na in G. after yāvat, the similar formula in G. ii. 8. 58 (corresponding to 9. 59, above) has na 'laṅkārān na bhujanaṃ āśeṣīsyae haṃ tāvas yāvat Rāmo vanāh vṛjat. \]

As to the ancient practice, the universal use of práya in the technical sense exemplified above and the restricted observance of "door-sitting" removes all doubt as to Bṛhaspati's rule. Anyone may sit in práya as a means of compulsion; the đcarita is a special case appertaining to a priest who alone may obstruct, to kill whom is peculiarly heinous even by letting him starve, while his immunity from active murder (which was out of the question) gave him safety when engaged in distraint of cattle, etc. The one "obstructed" was of course himself obliged to starve with the starving creditor, so that the practice, as far as fasting went, resolved itself into a sort of stomach-duel. The restriction to a priest must have been in the minds of the legal writers, as it is expressed as a matter of course in the epic.

It is interesting to find in the epic the explicit statement (lacking in the early law-books) that door-sitting was not permitted against "consecrated kings," whereas, according to the ancient laws of Ireland, quoted by Maine, op. cit. p. 280, the creditor might distraint without fasting in the case of a debtor "not of chieftain grade," but in the case of a chieftain it was necessary to "fast upon him."

Finally, to these oldest literary illustrations of the law I will add the oldest reference to the practice known to me in Hindu literature. Since the custom of constraining by suicide appears to be even Indo-European, it may indeed seem unimportant to track it back as far as possible in Hindu literature. Yet, since, on the other hand, there is always a lurking doubt as to whether a custom which is found among several related peoples be not self-developed in each rather than inherited by all, it may not be unprofitable to note a trace of this sort of fasting in Vedic literature that is considerably older than either law or epic. Such a trace is to be found in the Kāuṣitaki Upanishad of the Rig Veda, one of the five oldest philosophical dialogues that we possess (circa 700–800 B.C.). Here, as a simile in a metaphysical discussion, is introduced a case: “As if one, after begging a village and getting nothing, should fast (on the village) saying ‘I would not eat now even if (the village) should give,’ and then those same (villagers) who previously should repulse him come and urge him saying ‘Permit us to give to thee.’” It is even possible to translate the first clause “after begging and getting nothing, should fast on the village.”

The reason for the suddenly insistent generosity pictured here can be only that the villagers fear that the beggar will starve himself to death out of revenge, and that they will suffer the usual consequences of the prāyopareṇā. This takes the custom back to at least the close of the Vedic period in India, a date earlier by several centuries, I think, than that of any allusion to the practice previously noticed.1

1 The word used is the same as in the expression I have cited above from the epic (bhūra [pu aprīqat]). It is not material, however, whether we translate “fasts on the village” or “after begging a village should sit down (in prāya) saying ‘I would not eat,’” since the following words and the result of the act show that prāyangareṇa is intended. The text is: yathā grāmām bhūṣitrā labhītra pavī̄ṣṭu na āha āto dattam açītaḥ iti ya evi ‘nam prastāt pratyācākṣirais ta evi ‘nam upamantragante dadāma tu iti, Kāuṣ. ii. 1.

2 So far as I have been able to ascertain, the practice of door-sitting to obtain payment of a debt is not found in China, but starvation to compel one to grant a desire is practiced there, and suicide (by knife) on the doorstep, either with the same purpose or to insure a curse upon the householder, is not infrequent. Under cases of Suicide in General, I have neglected above to give any early examples of suicide by leaping from a cliff, but this was always a favorite mode of dying (for love, as early as Rig Veda, X. 95. 14).
The Religion of the Achaemenian Kings. First Series. The Religion according to the Inscriptions.—By Professor A. V. Williams Jackson, of Columbia University, New York City. With an Appendix by Dr. Louis H. Gray.

In one of the most striking passages of Isaiah, the Lord God Jehovah speaks 'to His Anointed, to Cyrus, whose right hand I have grasped,' saying, 'I myself will go before thee; ways will I make level, Doors of bronze will I break in pieces, and bars of iron cut asunder; And I will give thee the treasures of darkness and the hoards of secret places; for it is I, JHVH, who calls thee by thy name, I, the God of Israel. For the sake of Jacob, my Servant, and Israel, my Chosen, I called thee by thy name, I took delight in thee though thou knewest me not' (Is. 45. 2–4, Cheyne's translation). This is Cyrus the Great, Cyrus the Achaemenian, Cyrus the hero of Xenophon's ideal Greek romance, Cyrus the Persian king whose name is still honored after the lapse of centuries.

But what was the creed of this 'friend of JHVH' (Is. 44. 28), and what was the faith of those Achaemenian rulers, Darius, Xerxes, and Artaxerxes, whose names are known to history? This question is one of interest and of importance alike to Biblical students and to students of the faith of Ancient Iran; for it was less than a century before the Babylonian Captivity and the coming of Cyrus, that the great teacher Zoroaster arose as the prophet of Ormazd and with ringing voice exhorted men to eschew evil and to choose the good. The significance as well as the interest which this problem of the religion of the Achaemenian kings has for the investigator, is shown by the number of studies which have already been made upon it. The present research is undertaken not with the expectation of making clear all points connected with the Achaemenian faith, nor with the idea of determining whether the Achaemenidae were true Zoroastrians or not; but the investigation is made with an eye to bringing together the material relating to the Achaemenian creed as fully as possible, and with a hope that perhaps some hints may be given to students with regard to the relation of the Ancient Persian kings to Zoroastrianism. A partial bibliographical list of studies in the field of the Achaemenian religion is given below.

The discussion of the subject and the evidence which we possess concerning the religion of the Achaemenidae will be presented in the following order:

A. The Religion of the Achaemenians according to the Old Persian Inscriptions.

a. Introduction.

'A great god is Aûramazda who created this earth, who created yonder heaven, who created man, who created peace for man, who made Darius king' (baga vërzaka Aûramazda hya imâm bûnim adâ hya avam asmânâm adâ hya martiyâm adâ hya šiyâtim adâ martiyâyâ hya Dârayavaum xšâyâbiyam aku-nauâš, NR. a. 1–8; Elv. 1–8; Sz. c. 1–4); or again, 'Aûramazda the great, who is the greatest of the gods, it was he who made Darius king, it was he who gave to him the kingdom, by the grace of Aûramazda Darius is king' (Aûramazdâ vërzaka hya mabîštû bagânâm hauv Dârayavaum xšâyâbiyam adadâ haušâyi xšârâm frûbara vašnû Aûramazdâhû Dârayavaû xšûtâbiya, Dar. Pers. d. 1–5)—these are the lines which ring clearly with the note of fervent piety and zealous devotion, or the chord which the ancient Persian monarch Darius never tired of striking. Never was there a sovereign who felt himself more to be king by divine right, a truer Rex Dei Gratia, than did this Achaemenian ruler. 'By the grace of Aûramazda I am king; Aûramazda brought the kingdom to me' (vašnû Aûramazdâhû adam xšûtâbiya amiy Aûramazdâ xšârâm manû frûbara, Bh. 1. 11–12)—'Aûramazda bore aid unto me until this kingdom was held firm; by the grace of Aûramazda I hold this kingdom firm' (Aûramazdâmâi yâstâm abara yâtâ ima xšârâm adûrû vašnû Aûramazdûhû ima xšârâm dârayándiy.—Bh. 1. 24–26). In every crisis and in every battle 'Aûramazda bore aid' to Darius (Bh. 1. 55, 87, etc. etc.), put his enemies to confusion, or 'delivered them over into his hand' (pâsûva diš Aûramazdâ manû dastâyû akunauû, Bh. 4. 35); every battle was won 'by the grace of Aûramazda' (Bh. 1. 94; 2. 25, etc.); and in his final summing up of his achievements, it is to the grace of God that he ascribes all his success: ‘that which I did, I did in every way by the grace of Auramazda’ (ima tya adam akunavam hamahyāyā bārda vaśnā Auramazdāha akunavam, Bh. 4. 59–60). So often does Darius take pains to attribute his success to the grace of Auramazda that we are tempted to stop and count the occurrences of the ‘Dei Gratia’ phrase, and we find that vaśnā Auramazdāha occurs no less than 34 times in the columns of the great Behistān inscription alone; and within the compass of the same 420 lines, or so, the name of Auramazdā is called upon fully 69 different times. The rock-records, therefore, bear evidence enough that Darius was a god-fearing king and upheld that standard to his people. The tone still echoes in the short and unimportant inscriptions of Xerxes and of Artaxerxes Mnemon and Ochus, but it seems to have lost the clear ring of the voice of the earlier monarch and to have become more or less formulaic. Still there is no question that these sovereigns were worshippers of Ormazd whatever question there may be as to their individual views, leanings, or tenets. The entire matter of the religion of the Achaemenians as set forth in the inscriptions of Behistān, Persepolis, and elsewhere, has been excellently treated in an article already referred to on p. 161, n. 1; it is by Professor L. C. Casartelli, La Religion des Rois Achéménides d’après leurs Inscriptions, (Compte rendu du 3ère Congrès Scientifique international des Catholiques tenu à Bruxelles, Septembre 1894, pp. 1–13—Bruxelles 1895). In this study Casartelli gathers together all that is said in the Old Persian Inscriptions concerning the faith of their princely authors. As my own plan includes a treatment of the religion of the Achaemenians from all the sources accessible, in addition to the Inscriptions, I must in this First Series necessarily go over this particular part of the subject again, which he has already covered. But as my results have been reached independently, I know that no one will more gladly welcome them, as agreeing in the main with his own, than the successor of Mgr. de Harlez.

(b.) Auramazda or the God of the Old Persian Inscriptions.

Auramazdā važraka hya mabiśka bagānām, or again, baga važraka Auramazdā, are the lines that give the name and attributes of the Supreme Being of the Ancient Persian kings. The name Auramazdā, or Ormazd, is the same as Ahura Mazda in the Avesta, and it signifies ‘the Lord Wisdom,’ 'Sovereign Knowledge." In the Avesta the name of the divinity is always written as two distinct words, each declined independently and often separated or sometimes used alone. In the Gāthās or oldest metrical hymns of the Avesta the two parts of the divine name are frequently separated by several intervening words, or even a line. In these ancient Zoroastrian Psalms, moreover, the arrangement of the two words as Mazda . . . . Ahura . . . . Mazda. As for the Achaemenian Inscriptions themselves, there is only one instance in which we find the parts of the name divided and separately declined. The instance is on a monument of Xerxes, and therefore later than Darius; it is Xerx. Pers. ca[ch]. 17, vaśnā Aura-hya Mazdāka. There is likewise only a single example of the use of aura-alone; this time, however, it is actually employed in one of the shorter inscriptions of Darius himself. The occurrence is found in Dar. Pers. e. 23–24, šiyātiš . . . . Aurā niras-ātiy 'Peace shall descend from Aura.' So much for the divine name Auramazda.

The designation baga, the linguistic cognates of which in other languages may be compared, is employed in the Old Persian Inscriptions as the generic term for 'god' and its use is comparatively frequent. In the Avesta, however, the occurrences of the word are relatively infrequent; but at least two of the instances which are found in that sacred book are employed with reference to Ormazd (Ys. 10. 10; 70. 1). In the Inscriptions, Auramazda is called mābišta bagānām (Dar. Pers. d. 1; Xerx. Eliv. 2; Xerx. Van 2) or 'the greatest or supreme of the gods'; in the Avesta Mithra is 'the very wisest of the gods,' bayānām asti ažəxram-woastmō (Yt. 10. 141) and in Yt. 10. 1 Mithra is spoken of as

3 For the other instances of bayā see Justi, Hdb. der Zendsprache s. v. baya, bayıldāta, and (?) hubāya. As regards plurality, the plural bayānām occurs only in Yt. 10. 141 in the Avesta, as mentioned above, but we find the plural bayān, bakān in Pahlavi, e. g. Sg. 4. 7. 29: Dk. 8. 15. 1 (West, SBE. xxiv. 128, 130–131; xxxvii. 34). In this last passage we are informed first of 'the worship of Aūharmazd, the highest of divinities (bakān)’—a phrase very similar to the one employed by Darius—and, secondly, we learn of 'the worship of the angels.'
but little lower than Ahura Mazda himself. The phrase even recalls the words of the Psalmist extolling the Lord as ‘exalted far above all gods’ (Ps. 97. 9; cf. also Ex. 15. 11; 18. 11; Deut. 10. 17; Ps. 82. 1; 95. 3; 97. 7, and notice C. de Harlez, La Religion persane p. 8).

The attribute vazaraka ‘mighty, great,’ as well as mabīsta ‘supreme, greatest’ manifest the belief in the sovereign power and exalted majesty of Aoramazd; he is the great god, the highest of the gods, just as Darius himself is ‘the great king, the king of kings’ (zāyabiya vazaraka zāyabiya zāyabiyānām, Bh. 1. 1 et passim). The supreme power and divine omnipotence of Aoramazd is sufficiently evidenced in the triumphs which he gives to his chosen Darius, who is as much the favored one of Ormazd as is Aśoka ‘the Beloved of the Gods’ in India; but it is equally manifested in what he divinely causes to be done through the king’s agency.’ Darius proudly proclaims that when Aoramazd ’saw this earth in dire confusion he brought her unto me’ (yadā avāna imān bhumim yudhiyā (?) paśūnādim manā frābara, NR. a. 32, cf. also Casartelli, La Religion, p. 39) and the king firmly believes that he was chosen to carry out the sacred mission because he was a just king and not a sinner.

Above all functions assigned to the godhead is that of the creative faculty. Ahuramazd ‘created’ (uṣū) the earth, the heaven, mankind, and all the blessings that are vouchsafed to man. The sentence from the inscriptions referring to Aoramazd’s creative power has been quoted in full above; it is similar to the glorification of Ahura Mazda in the Avesta as the one ‘who created the cow and righteousness; who created the good waters and plants; who created light, earth and all good things’ (ya guṇāh aṣmācā dāst apasā dāst urvarāhāvā vanukhīt raoōtēcā dāst bānīncā vairācā vohu, Ys. 37. 1). Compare also the noble Gāthā passage on creation, Ys. 44. 3–5, also Ys. 57. 17, as well as the standing epithet dātar ‘creator’ in the formulaic Avestan address to the deity. This emphasis of the idea of Ormazd’s creative activity is a cardinal tenet of the whole Iranian faith; it is repeated not only in the single shorter inscriptions of Darius but it is retained as a hallowed formula in the tablets of Xerxes and of Artaxerxes Ochus. With regard to the idea of creation itself, nothing is said to show that the creation is a bringing forth ex *nihilo, but the root /dā in the inscriptions is used only of Auramazda among all divinities,¹ and I have touched elsewhere upon the possibility of the idea.

While dealing with the formula in which Auramazda is spoken of as the one ‘who created this earth, who created yonder heaven, who created man’ (see above), we must emphasize its closing words, ‘who created peace for man’—hya šiyātīn adā marthiya-hyd. The word šiyātī denotes repose, quiet, blessing, prosperity, joy, peace, like its Avestan cognate šāti (see especially Vd. i. 1) and like the root /šā- and its kindred, New Pers. šād etc. The employment of the word, as Casartelli, p. 41, hints, may possibly contain an echo of the felicity of man in the golden age; but it seems more likely if we imagine that *šiyātī*² denotes the same idea that is alluded to by ‘peace’ or ‘welfare’ in the Deutero-Isaiah (45. 7) with its Persian coloring. We remember that Jehovah says ‘I form the light, and create darkness; I make peace, and create evil,’ or as Cheyne’s version reads ‘I am JHVH, and there is none else—Who forms light, and creates darkness, who makes welfare and creates calamity.’ The Judeo-Persian text has יִשְׁתֵּל i.e. Arab. šal ‘peace.’ Dr. Gray calls attention to Esther 3. 13 (= Apoc. Esth. 13. 2) ‘peace desired by all men on earth’—τὴν πανθυμάνα τοῖς πάσιν ἀνθρώπων ἔφη, and notes that Keiper, Die Perser des Aeschylos, pp. 22–23 compares Aesch. Pers. 852, 918 with the idea contained in the Old Persian. The question of the possible connection or the degree of relationship between the Isaiah passage and the Achaemenian faith has been often commented upon and variously estimated.⁴

As Auramazda is the author of peace as well as creator and preserver of all mankind, he is especially besought to assist in trouble and to give protection from harm. Thus in the crisis with the pseudo-Smerdis Gaumāta, Darius says ‘I called upon Auranazda for aid; Auranazda brought assistance unto me’ (adəm Auranazdām pətiyəvahaiy Auranazdāmai yəpəstəm abara, Bh. 1. 54), or again in his prayer for deliverance from evil: ‘may Auranazdā protect me from evil, and protect also my family, and also this land; I beseech Auranazda for this, may Auranazda grant this unto me’ (məm Auranazdā pətəv həcə sar . . . utəməi viəbəm utə inəm daheyaum aita adəm Auranazdām jədiyəmiy aitamaiy Auranazdā dədətv, NR. a. 51-55); or once more, Auranazda is invoked ‘with the all (or clan ?) gods’ to protect the country ‘from an invading horde, from famine, and from the Lie’ (manə Auranazdā upəstəm bərətvə havə viəbəisi bagaibiis utə inəm daheyaum Auranazdā pətəv həcə hainiyə həcə dušiyərə həcə draugə aniya or abiy (?)) iməm daheyaum mə aʃəmiyə mə hainiyə mə dušiyərəm mə draugə aita adəm yən . . . m jədiyəmiy Auranazdām havə viəbəisi bagaibiis aitamaiy Auranazdā dədətv havə viəbəisi bagaibiis, Dar. Pers. d. 13-24). Similarly Xerxes prays that ‘Auranazda with the gods’ may protect him and what he has made, and that ‘Auranazda with the gods’ may protect that which his father Darius made (cf. məm Auranazdā pətəv havə bagaibiis utə tyamaiy kartəm utə təmaiy pətəm Dərayavahasi xəyəbiyəyi kartəm avsaçi Auranazdā pətəv havə bagaibiis, Xerx. Pers. ca[cb]. 12-15; Xerx. Pers. da[db]. 18-20). A discussion of what is meant by the allusion to the ‘gods’ is postponed for the moment in order to confine the attention to Auranazda as the protector of mankind. In referring to the chiselled monuments which Darius has caused to be inscribed with his achievements the king adds an invocation of blessing upon all who take care to preserve the inscription: ‘may Auranazda be thy friend, and may thy family be large, and do thou live long, and let Auranazda make greater for thee whatsoever thou wilt do’ (Auranazdā bərvən dušə tiyə utətvə tənnə vəsiy biyə utə dərgəm jıvə utə təyə kunəvahy aitamaiy Auranazdā mazənam (?)) kunətv, Bh. 4. 74-76). On the contrary he imprecates the curses of Auranazda upon any one that may injure or destroy the inscription: ‘may Auramazda be thy slayer... and whatever thou shalt do, may Auramazda destroy that for thee’ (Auramazdātaiy jantā biyā... utā tya kunavāhy avataiy Auramazdā nikantvā, Bh. 4. 78–80). From this we may infer that Ormazd in the Ancient Persian creed was at times looked upon as a god of justice and avenging wrath, or we might speak of Auramazda as the Psalmist of old spake of Jehovah, as the Lord that turneth ‘man to destruction,’ as well as the god that saith, ‘return, ye children of men’.

(c) The Bagas or Other Gods beside Auramazda.

From two of the passages quoted in the preceding paragraph and from several others that may be cited, it is seen that Auramazda, although supreme and the ruler of the universe, is not the only divinity that is recognized as existing. He is ‘the greatest of the gods’ or mābišta bagānām, but there are ‘other gods’ beside him. See also Stave, Einfluss des Parsismus auf das Judentum, pp. 118–120. In his general thanksgiving Darius says that ‘Auramazda, and the other gods that are, brought assistance to me’ (Auramazdāmaiy upastām abara utā anīyā bagāha tyaiy hantiy, Bh. 4. 61 and 63).

By the side of Auramazda also there is special mention of ‘all the gods’ or perhaps originally ‘the clan gods’ (haddā vihābīś bagābīś) which are alluded to a half dozen or more times. Whether vihābīś or vihībīś is to be read, and whether the ‘all’ gods or the ‘clan’ gods are to be understood, has been much discussed, as will be noticed hereafter, but perhaps Brunnhofer, Iran und Turan, p. 200, has come as near to the truth as any one when he makes the two ideas practically the same. The question will be reviewed below in the Appendix. But whatever view be held, there can be little doubt that the anīyā bagāha or vihābīś bagābīś of Darius are the τοῖς ἄλλοις θεῖοι or the πάντες θεοὶ alluded to in Xenophon’s romance of Cyrus (cf. Cyrop. 3. 3. 21; 8. 3. 11; 6. 1; 7. 5. 57; 8. 73—see Second Series) or Ὀπορνίη and Μίρπον, the divinities that are mentioned beside the supreme deity of the Persians in Herodotus, 1. 131. See the discussion below.

1 Cf. also Bartholomae, IF. ix. 280 n.
2 Compare also Plutarch, Artaxerxes 80 = p. 111. A somewhat similar idea, though partly eschatological, is implied in the Zoroastrian Gāthās, Ys. 43. 4–5, cf. Ys. 47. 4. On this compare also Eugen Wilhelm, ZDMG. xl. 105–106.
(d) Mithra and Anahita.

These two names, Mithra and Anahita, are the names of two divinities familiar in all Iranian literature. They belong no doubt to the bagas. In the two inscriptions of Artaxerxes Memon (Art. Sus. a. 5 and Art. Ham. 6) they are mentioned together beside Auramazda — Auramazda Anah[i]ta utâ M[i]bra—all three being invoked for aid and protection. In like manner Artaxerxes Ochus in his prayer calls upon Auramazda and Mithra: ‘may Auramazda and the god Mithra protect me and protect this country and that which has been made by me’ (mân Auramazda utâ M[i]bra baga pâtuv utâ imân dahyum utâ tya mân kartâ, Art. Pers. a [b]. 24–26). The general position of Mithra and Anahita in the Iranian religion has been sufficiently discussed elsewhere (bibliographical references will be found in my article in Grundriss der iran. Philologie, ii. §§ 40, 43). It is enough here to say that neither of these divinities is mentioned in the Gāthās, and as they are first invoked by Artaxerxes Memon it is generally regarded as retrogression or descent from the standard of Darius; but this is a matter to be more fully considered, and Mithra-Mithra, as a divinity, goes back to the period of Indo-Iranian unity.

(e) Foy’s Conjecture of Arhat (7).

In KZ. xxxv. 45, Foy in his interesting studies upon the Inscriptions conjectured that in the difficult word ābaštām or abīštām the b has been miswritten or is misread instead of r, and that we are to read arštām. This would be the acc. sg. fem. of arštāt-, the genius of Uprightness, one of the personified abstractions which appears in Zoroastrianism—see Jackson, Gd. Iran. Phil. ii. 638. He again repeats the same idea in ZDMG. liv. 304, n. 1, to the effect that ‘ābaštām statt arštām vermeisselt oder von Rawlinson verlesen ist.’ This is very ingenious and it would be very attractive as supporting the view that Darius was a Zoroastrian, on which we need all help that can be obtained; but it is difficult to believe that the royal stone cutter made a mistake in the letter, and we must suspend judgment until the rock itself is examined again and the exact reading determined, before we can give a decision on the question, or hazard a theory based upon the uncertain decipherment. The common reading of this word will be referred to below, p. 172.
(f) Evil recognized as a Principle in the Old Persian Inscriptions.

The question whether dualism formed a tenet in the creed of the Achaemenians has been much discussed; and, owing to the lack of emphasis of dualistic traits in the Inscriptions, the claim has been made that the earlier Achaemenian monarchs, for this very reason, could not have been Zoroastrians, and that they did not believe in dualism. I have already presented this matter in Gdr. d. iran. Philologie ii. 628, and have given the usual reason why there was no special call to mention Ahirman in these edicts. But whatever may be said on the subject, as I there stated, we have the principle of Evil plainly recognized in Drauga 'Falsehood, Lie.' In the Achaemenian Inscriptions this noun is as much a personification of a Satanic being as is Druj in the Zoroastrian Gathás (see also Gdr. d. iran. Phil. ii. Chap. vi. A and C). Furthermore, the verb duru 'to lie' occurs 34 times in the inscriptions with all the evil atmosphere of the English 'to bedevil' or 'raise hell.' It is the stock word which Darius employs when he speaks of the rebellions against his divine sovereignty, for he is Ormazd's king. Full of feeling he says: 'the army afterward became hostile; the Lie afterward became rife in the land, both in Persia, and in Media, and in the other lands' (pasáva kára artika abava pasáva drauga dahyávā vasisī abava utā Pársaiy utā Múdaiy utā aniýávā dahyunúvā—Bh. i. 33–35). Or again he says: 'these lands which became confederate, it was the Lie that made them confederate, so that they lied unto the people' (dahyávā ima tyā hamífyā abava draugadih hamífyā akunauvā tyā imaiy káram adurujiyāśa—Bh. iv. 33–35).

In the same spirit it is prescribed that 'the man who is a liar' (martiya hya drauṣana, Bh. iv. 38, 68) shall be severely punished, and there is deep fervor in the hope of Darius that what he has written in his inscription may not be regarded as 'falsified' (daruṣxam, Bh. iv. 49). The king lays especial stress on the fact that divine aid was granted him inasmuch as he was 'not hostile, not a liar, not a crooked-dealer' (ya[b̥a] niyi arika āham naiy drauṣana āham naiy zurakara āham, Bh. iv. 63–64). Other evil forces are recognized in another prayer of Darius to Ormazd:

1. Darmesteter, Études Iranennes, i. 45 n., thinks that drauṣa is political, not religious, in its implication; but it seems to me that the religious as well as the political is implied in this word.

Religion of the Achaemenian Kings.

‘may Auramazda protect this land from an invading horde, from Drought, from the Lie; may no enemy (?) come to this land, nor an invading horde, nor Drought, nor the Lie (imām dahiyaum. Auramazdā pātus hačā haināyā hačā dušiyārā hačā draugā aniya [or abiy] imām dahiyaum mā ājāmiyā mā hainā mā duši-yārām mā draugā, Dar. Pers. d. 15–12 = H. 15–20).’ Here we have a personification in Dušiyāra, which corresponds to Dušiyārya, the evil genius of famine, bad harvest, sterility, drought, in the Avesta (Yt. 8, 51–54, cf. also Yt. 8, 36, and see Spiegel, Erān. Alterthumskunde ii. 72, 139, and Jackson, Gdr. d. iran. Phil. ii. § 24, 60). We have also hainā which like the Avestan hainā may almost be looked upon as a personification of the evils of invasion and rapine.

Another incarnation of evil in the form of treachery and deceit is implied in the prayer made by Darius, as already quoted above from Nāqš-i Rustam: ‘may Auramazdā protect both me and my clan and this my land from treachery [or deceit]’—(mām Auramazdā pātus hačā sar[ā] utāmaiy vidam utā imām dahiyaum, NR.a. 52–53).”

(g) The Right Path.

The idea of the ‘path’ and the ‘way’ is familiar to us in the Bible, and it is found also elsewhere, for example in the Vedic rtasya pathi, sukṛtasya pathi (see Grassman, s. v. pathi), which is comparable with the Avestan ašahe paiti pantam, Yt. 10. 86, Vd. 4. 43, and especially Ys. 72. 11, or again it is found in the ‘path’ of Buddhism. The Ancient Persian Inscriptions contain the same idea. In the closing words of the Nāqš-i Rustam inscription Darius makes an earnest appeal unto his people individually: ‘O man, let not the commandment of Auramazda...

2 The reading sar[ā] is due to my conjectural explanation proposed in JAOS. xx. 55. The Bab. and New S. (or New Elam.) versions favor this view of evil, and with Old Pers. sara we may also compare Sīh. sa[a], sula ‘deceit,’ Geiger Etymol. des Singh. No. 1492, and Gray, Indo-Iranian Phonology, § 179. I suppose I am hardly entitled to quote from Professor Justi’s letter mentioning Av. sarəjan to Dr. Gray.

razišt in Yt. 10. 3, cf. Ys. 68. 13, and other references to padī and abswan collected in Gdr. d. iran. Philol. ii. 626.

(b) The Commandment of Auramazda, and the Law.

The words hya Auramazdah firemaha, ‘the Firmān of Ormazd, or the Commandment of Auramazda,’ as cited in the preceding paragraph, would be sufficient in themselves to show that the Law of Mazda formed the standard which Darius upheld. But whether that Commandment was the Avesta of Zoroaster, as we know it, or some other Avesta as priestly code, or not an Avesta at all, has been much discussed. It is necessary here to present a paragraph on the subject and then to return to it later.

The special passage which originally called up the discussion is one that is both defective and extremely difficult to interpret.
It is Bh. 4. 64. The text was read by Rawlinson as upariya abištām upariya ya . . . ; Spiegel gave upariy ābaštām upariy mām; Weisbach and Bang now have upariy ābištām (?)
upariyāyam; so that the reproduction of the actual characters on the stone seems to be uncertain. Oppert, in 1872, was the first to set the ball a-rolling. In Jour. Asiat., 6th sér., xix. 295 (1872) he read apariy ābaštām upariyāyam, with the rendering, ‘secundum legem regebam,’ and saw in ābaštā the prototype of the Avesta. The basis for this reading and interpretation he especially found in the version of the Inscriptions whether Scythian, Median, New Susian, or New Elamitic, and this version he translated in 1879 by, ‘j’ai gouverné conformément à la Loi,’ adding in the footnote, ‘La loi, en perse ābaštā, le prototype du mot d’Avesta.’ See Oppert, Le peuple et la langue des Mèdes, p. 151 and also pp. 155, 183, 186. Further support for this has Oppert's own strong argument for his view was based on the short and difficult paragraph Bh. l., which is found only in the second or New Elamitic of the three languages. This paragraph he rendered: ‘Et Darius le roi dit : Par la grâce d’Ormazd, j’ai fait une collection de textes ailleurs en langue arienne, qui autrefois n’existait pas. Et j’ai fait un texte de la Loi (de l’Avesta) et un commentaire de la Loi, et la Bénédiction (la prière, le Zend), et les Traductions. Et ce fut écrit et je le promulguai en entier; puis je rétablis l’ancien livre dans tous les pays et les peuples reconnairent.’ If such be the real tenor of the New Elamitic statement, few things could be more important or more satisfactory with regard to the political history of Mazdaism, or especially Zoroastrianism, as Darmesteter, Spiegel, de Harlez, and other scholars have observed. But, alas, Oppert’s view does not seem to have met with general acceptance.

Darmesteter, writing in November, 1879, argued with hesitation, yet with firmness, against it in the Introduction to his Zend-Avesta, SBE, iv. p. lxi. n. 2 (publ. in 1880). What he says covers the ground so well that it is worth repeating in part. After presenting Oppert’s view and his rendering of the paragraph, he says: ‘The authority of Oppert is so great, and at the same time the passage is so obscure, that I hardly know if there be more temerity in rejecting his interpretation or in adopting it. Yet I beg to observe that the word dippi mas [which Oppert renders as ‘textes’] is the usual Scythian transliteration of the Persian dipi, ‘an inscription,’ and there is no apparent reason for departing from that meaning in this passage; if the word translated ‘la Loi,’ u k k u, really represents here a Persian word Aβašta, it need not denote the Avesta, the religious book, as in that case the word would most certainly not have been translated in the Scythian version, but only transliterated; the ideogram for ‘Bénédiction, prière,’ may refer to religious inscriptions like Persepolis I.; the import of the whole passage would therefore be that Darius caused other inscriptions to be engraved, and wrote other edicts and religious formulae (the word ‘traductions’ is only a guess).’ So Darmesteter op. cit. lxi. n. 2; see also his notes on pp. xxx, xliv; and the same statement in Revue Critique, 1880, of. Études Iran., ii. 7-9. Again later in his French translation Le Zend-Avesta, 1892-93, he refers to the matter, i. p. xxxix. n. 1., and in iii. p. xci. repeats his rejection of Oppert's view that the Abaštā was for Darius the name of a Code, and he once more adds: 'nous conclurons donc que l'inscription ne se rapporte pas à un livre religieux et que l'on ne peut s'appuyer sur ce passage pour établir sous Darius l'existence d'un livre analogue à notre Avesta. Mais il ne serait pas moins téméraire de nier l'existence d'une littérature zoroastrienne quelconque, soit sous Darius, soit sous ses successeurs.'

Spiegel was of the same opinion as Darmesteter. In his Altpersische Keilschriften, pp. 106–109 (publ. 1881), he opposes Oppert's view on various grounds. He reviews the whole situation, but concludes (p. 109) 'dass man unter Abashtā nicht unser Awestā verstehen darf.'

C. de Harlez, Avesta traduit (1881) pp. xi., cxxi., allows that ābaštā means law but that it is law in general and not the sacred text (e. g. 'les travaux de M. Oppert nous apprennent que l'abaštā [so printed] est la loi en général et non un terme sacré formant une sorte de nom propre'—p. cxxi.). Nor was de Harlez willing to admit that Darius was a Zoroastrian. He also touched on the etymology of Avesta again in Manuel de l'Avesta, p. xiv., and in BB. viii. 176.

Weisbach, Die Achámenideninschriften zweiter Art, p. 73 (publ. 1890), indeed translates the New Elamite version of Bh. 4. 64 as 'nach dem Gesetze herrschte (?) ich'; but his rendering of Bh. 1. does not find all in the passage that Oppert saw; the doubtful places he indicates by dots. Weisbach's rendering runs (p. 77): 'Der König Darius spricht: Durch die Gnade Ahuramazdas machte ich Inschriften in anderer Weise (?), [nämlich] auf arisch, was vormals nicht war, und das grosse . . . . . . und das grosse . . . . und das . . . . und das . . . machte ich, und es wurde geschrieben und ich . . . . . . . Darauf sandte ich selbige Inschriften in alle Lande und die Leute . . . . .' His comment at p. 94 merely gives Oppert's and Norris's renderings of the different prāg legōma.

Fr. Müller in WZKM. i. 60–63 (1887) read: (yabā adām utā) maiyya taumā upariyyā ābaštām apariyyāma 'weil wir, ich und meine Familie, nach dem heiligen Gesetze wandelten'—notice his observation on the reconstruction and the suggested plural, op. cit. p. 62. The same scholar later in WZKM. x. 175–177 (1896) calls Oppert's identification of the form ābaštām 'mindestens zweifelhaft' (p. 175), or rather he says, 'alles spricht gegen die Annahme, dass das Awesta mit dem abaštā oder ābaštā der Keilschriftformen identisch ist, da wir sonst dem Worte in viel früherer Zeit begegnen und es bei den Armeniern finden müssten" (p. 176). In WZKM. xi. 291-292 nothing especial is added.

Bang, BB. xvii. 287 (1891) gave his reasons for reading abīštām (with i) which he and Weisbach afterwards adopted in their edition (or rather abīštām, a 'Druckfehler' cf. BB. viii. 292); and when he later discussed the etymology in IF. viii. 292-293 (1898), he concluded the paragraph with a special warning: 'mit dem "Awesta" braucht das Wort nichts anderes als die äussere Form gemein zu haben: in Frankreich gabs schon vor dem "Code (Napoléon)" sogenannte "codes."'

Geldner, Gdr. d. Iran. Phil. ii. 2 (1896), while speaking of the etymology of the word Avesta, says that Oppert's identification with abaštām 'ist mindestens zweifelhaft.'

Finally, Foy in KZ. xxxv. 45 (1897) sought to cut the Gordian knot by avoiding the reading upariy abaštām altogether, and by regarding the signs as mis-carved and misread, and proposing upariy ārštām, as discussed above, p. 160. To this suggestion he reverts again in ZDMG. liv. 364, n., when discussing Bang's paragraph, IF. viii. 292, and he adds the assurance 'dass ap. upariy ab(i)štām nicht dem bab. ina dēnātu entspricht.' His conclusion still favors ārštām. (In ZDMG. lii. 254 only the etymology of Awesta is touched upon.)

Such is the position of the question up to the present, so far as I know it. But after having brought forward the main points it unfortunately seems wisest to leave the vexed problem for the present, with the idea of taking it up later after actually examining the inscriptions themselves, with regard to the doubtful letters, and to wait for further advance in the interpretation of the three languages concerned, instead of hazarding a view just now. This, to be sure, may seem unsatisfactory in many respects; but it appears better than to give a dogmatic decision on evidence that is not yet complete. I can only say I shall be most glad if Oppert's view in general be found to have been on the right lines; my present inclination would be to favor such an attitude, because of the importance of its bearing. But perhaps the wish is father of the thought.

(1) Religious Observance and Places of Worship.

In the Inscriptions themselves the Ancient Persian monarchs make no direct allusion to religious ceremonies or to ritual observances. For such information we have rather to look to the description which Herodotus gives and to allusions found in other classical writers or elsewhere. These will be given hereafter. The Inscriptions, however, contain several references to prayer. King Darius, for example, speaks of having been in dire distress and says, ‘then I besought Auramazda; Auramazda brought me aid’ (paśāva adam Auramazdām patiyāvahaiy Auramazdāmāiy upastām abara Bh. 1, 54–55). Or again he prays, ‘this boon I ask of Auramazda with all the gods; this may Auramazda grant me with all the gods’ (aita adam yān...m jadīyāmīy Auramazdām hadā vihābibīh bgaibībh aitamāiy Auramazdā dayātūv hadā vihābibīh bgaibībh, Dar. Pers d. 20–24). NR. a. 53–55 is very similar. For Avestan parallels in phraseology we may compare Ys. 9, 19, imam teqem paqiinīm yānem haoma jaiyēmi dūroos, and Ys. 65, 12, imai və ūpī jaiyēmi.

The only mention of places of divine worship which we find in the Old Persian Inscriptions is in the often quoted passage Bh. 1, 62–64. This may be rendered: ‘I established it [the kingdom] in its place. As before, so I made the places of worship which Gaumāta the Magian had destroyed’ (adāmēn gāvā avāstāyan yābā parrwmanyī avabh ādam akunam āyādanā tyā Gaumāta hya maqū viyakā). The question whether the word āyādanā denotes ‘places of worship’ that belonged only to the Persians, or whether this includes also the temples of nations under the Persian sway, and as to what was the purpose of Gaumāta in destroying them, has been much debated. A discussion of this question will be found in the Appendix below, p. 180, and it will be taken up in a later series when the general deductions are drawn.

(f) Summary.

In the present series I have presented the religion of the Achaemenian kings, Darius, Xerxes, and Artaxerxes Mnemon and Ochus, purely from the objective standpoint as they are represented in their own Iranian Inscriptions. From the data given, the religion itself strikes one as being comparatively pure. Auramazda, the Lord God of Iran, is recognized as the supreme god, with other divinities beside him. Mithra and Anāhīta are mentioned by name. The principle of Evil may be said to be acknowledged, although the implications are faint. The choice between the two by following the ‘right path’ and the ‘commandment of Auramazda,’ or the law, may be deduced from an allusion in the texts themselves. Worship was regarded as an act of piety, and there were places of worship; but details regarding these are not given. Blessings are invoked in the Inscriptions and curses are imprecated, but naturally no minute injunctions are found. The necessity of speaking the truth, however, is inculcated as a cardinal tenet in the creed and the very foundation of the code of ethics. The standard of this moral and ethical code, so far as we can judge it, seems to us to be slightly lowered by the extremely cruel punishments which Darius inflicted, according to his own words. Yet we must remember that in these cases he was dealing with national offenders and traitors in the midst of perilous times.

Such at least may be said to be the impression conveyed by a study of the religion of the Old Persian kings according to the Iranian Inscriptions, which forms the subject of this first division. No material has thus far been brought in from outside; nor has any discussion been entered into as to the question whether Darius and Xerxes were followers of Zoroaster. I shall now present the additional material from the non-Iranian side in the Appendix by my pupil. For convenience also I shall include his deductions as to the Zoroastrian side of the problem, without commenting on them, and I shall take that entire matter up in a following series. I reserve also till later such a matter as that connected with the Achaemenian tombs, and similar discussions.

B. THE RELIGION OF THE ACHAEMENIANS ACCORDING TO THEIR NON-Iranian INSCRIPTIONS.

(APPENDIX BY DR. L. H. GRAY, PRINCETON UNIVERSITY.)

The Old Persian texts afford but a partial solution of the perplexing question of the religion of the Achaemenidae. The non-Iranian Inscriptions in Babylonian, New Susian, Egyptian, and Greek, which were carved at the command of these monarchs, add several data of importance. These contribute to our better understanding of their religious attitude and may help towards determining whether the dynasty was Zoroastrian or not.

The only scholar, so far as I know, who has touched upon this particular method of contributing to our scanty store of knowledge regarding the faith of the Ancient Persian kings is Bang, who has noted, Mélanges C. de Harlez 11, that the Babylonian translation by litr of the Old Persian jantā biyā (Bh. 4. 78-79) is paralleled by Ašur-nāṣir-abāl’s Monolith Inscription 90, Simtish Tiruvu ‘may he curse his fate.’ Bang also notes that the New Susian version (Bh. 3, 77, 79) adds that Ormazd is ‘the god of the Aryans’ ("Uraništa *nap *Arryanam, see Weisbach Achämenideninschr. zweit. Art, 16–17), a phrase which is not found either in the Old Persian or in the Babylonian version.

There are, however, several other passages in these non-Iranian Achaemenian Inscriptions which may throw some light upon the difficult problem under consideration, and it is the purpose of this Appendix to bring them together for convenience.

Cyrus the Great. Among the non-Iranian texts of the Achaemenidae (a list of which is given by Weisbach, Grundr. der iran. Philol. ii. 63–64) one of the best known is the Cylinder Inscription of Cyrus the Great. In this cylinder Cyrus declares that he came to restore the old order of things and, as the chosen of Merodach, to make amends for the exile to Kuitu brought upon certain captive deities by Nabonid by directing their return to their own temples again. A careful study of this inscription has been made by Tiele, Mélanges C. de Harlez, pp. 307–312. He thinks that Merodach was, in the eyes of Cyrus, but another name for Ormazd, and he compares the mention of Nabû’s name, together with that of Marduk, with the close association of Atar with his father, Ahura Mazda, in the Avestan texts, while the other minor deities named in the cylinders are analogous, in his judgment, to the angels (Av. yazata) in the Zoroastrian system.

I fear that I cannot at present subscribe entirely to this view of Tiele’s. Cyrus as a follower of the unreformed, pre-Zoroastrian creed (cf. Jackson, Grundr. der iran. Philol. ii. 617–618) may well have been as tolerant as the cylinder and the Old Testament represent him. Cyrus as a convert to the reformed teachings of Zarathushtra, all glowing with the fervor of the Master’s zeal, would scarcely have treated with such complacency the godlings of an alien faith. Judging from the cylinder and speaking in terms of orthodox Zoroastrianism, Cyrus seems to me to have been a daēv yaznian, not a mazdasyanian (similar also is the view of C. de Harlez, La Religion persane sous les Achéménides 2, reprint from Revue de l’instruct. publ. en Belge, xxxviii). Judging from the cylinder my own verdict on the religious attitude of this ‘shepherd of JHVH’ must be, at least for the present, the one which Tiele, p. 311, rejects. It is, that the motive of Cyrus in returning to their homes the exiled gods ‘was mere state-craft, even as Darius Hystaspes, whose own god was Aramaizd, later permitted himself to be called a worshipper of Amun-Re (see below page 184; and for further literature on this cylinder consult Weisbach and Tiele, as cited above, and Schrader’s notes to his edition of the cylinder with its translation in his Keilinschrifiliche Bibliothek iii. B. 120–127). The extremely high opinion of the religious attitude of Cyrus which is expressed by Cheyne, Origin and Religious Contents of the Psalter, pp. 182–183, as well as his esteem of Darius, ibid. pp. 280, 144, are in my judgment entirely too favorable to the Achaemenid kings. But when, on the other hand, Halévy, Revue des études juives i. 17–19, calls Cyrus ‘un polythéiste dans le sens le plus absolu du mot,’ he goes too far, it seems to me.

From the non-Iranian inscriptions of Cyrus I gain the impression that he was a true statesman in matters of religion, keeping his personal religious belief, whatever it may have been, in the background, as his position of ruler over nations of diverse faith and race required him to be ‘all things to all men.’

Cambyses. Cambyses can scarcely be regarded as a Zoroastrian if his inscription on the naophoric statue in the Vatican may be taken as a criterion. In regard to the great temple at Sais, Cambyses orders all intruders in the temple to depart and to have all obstructions put there by them removed. The fane is to be purified and priests and acolytes are to be chosen in accordance with Egyptian ritual. After the complete renovation of the temple the sacred feasts are to be held again in the same manner as of old (Brugsch, Thee. inscript. egypt. p. 693). When Cambyses visited Sais after these commands of his had been executed, he paid homage personally to the goddess Neit and poured forth libations to Osiris ‘even as former kings had done’ (Brugsch, p. 694, cf. also il. 18-23 of the text as given by Brugsch, pp. 639–640, and for the general attitude of Cambyses towards the Egyptian religion, Nikel, Herodot und die Keilschrifilforschung, p. 90=Tolman-Stevenson, Herodotus and the Empires of the East, p. 94).

\footnote{1 Like Cyrus the Great, Antiochus Soter (B. C. 280–260) found it politic to honor the Babylonian divinities. The Seleucid Greek built a temple to Nabû, whom he lauded as highly as a truly devout Babylonian monarch of old could have done, and to whom he prayed with fervor for all the blessings of life. The parallelism between Cyrus and Antiochus in this respect seems to me to be both striking and suggestive (see the Babylonian text of the inscription of Antiochus in Schrader, Keilinschrifiliche Bibliothek iii. B.186–189).} Darius. From the Old Persian Inscriptions themselves we have evidence enough to prove that Darius was a zealous worshipper of Ahriman. The non-Iranian texts of this monarch, however, supply additional data concerning his attitude toward religion which may justly cause some reluctance, it seems to me, to consider him a genuine Zoroastrian.

The Babylonian (Bh. 25) and New Susian (Bh. 1. 48) phrases equivalent to the Old Persian āyādanā (Bh. 1. 63-64), which is usually rendered 'places of worship' (see Spiegel's und Weisbach-Bang's editions of the texts; Oppert, J.A. 4ème série xvii. 404, Le peuple ... des Médes, p. 167; Justi, Grundr. der iran. Philol. ii. 420-427, ZDMG. liii. 89; Foy, KZ. xxxii. 420, 422, ZDMG. lii. 592, liv. 342-355; Gray, AJP. xxi. 16) seem to me quite significant. Both versions render āyādanā by 'houses of the gods' (Babyl. bitāti ša ilāni, New Sus. *ziyan *nappanna). In my judgment Darius repaired the temples of the national divinities of the peoples under his sway, 'which Gaumāta the Magian had dug down.' Why Gaumāta had destroyed these temples is not known. Perhaps a fierce iconoclastic zeal against the gods of another people had egged the usurper on; perhaps too he may have destroyed 'places of worship' of the Persians themselves through their failure to conform to the requirements of the Magian hierarchy (cf. Darmesteter, Le Zend-Avesta, iii. Introd. p. 71). These questions can scarcely be decided with our present sources of knowledge. At all events, I am inclined to consider āyādanā as including not only the fire-altars of the Ancient Persians, but the fanes of nations subject to the sway of Darius the king. If this view be a correct one, and if āyādanā includes 'temples' or 'houses of the gods' as well as 'places of worship,' it would seem almost impossible to assert that Darius was in harmony with Zoroastrian teaching when he rebuilt the religious structures torn down by the Magian Gaumāta. The political course of Darius appears to have been very like that of Cyrus when he not only sent back the captive gods from Kutu but also built them their temples anew (Cylinder Inscription 32, cf. Van Hoo-acker, Mélanges C. de Harlez, pp. 325-329), or when he restored the Temple at Jerusalem (II Chron. 36. 22-23, Ezra 1. 1-11) and thus gained the extravagant eulogy of the Deutero-Isaiah (Is. 44. 28, 45. 1-4). With a similar motive of statecraft Cambyses repaired the desecrated temple of Neit at Sais, and with a spirit quite as alien to that of the Zoroastrian reform.
Religion of the Achaemenian Kings.

The ancient Iranian horror of falsehood is well known (cf. Jackson, JA O.S. xiii. Proc. pp. 59–61). It is noteworthy that the Old Persian Inscriptions have the word for ‘lie,’ drauga, only in the singular. The Avesta likewise has only the singular drauga, such a late passage as Yt. 24. 29 being no real exception. The Babylonian version, on the contrary, uses the plural of the corresponding parsu ‘lie’ in the two passages in which the word occurs: Bh. 14 parsu ina mūtāti lā mūtu ‘the lies became very numerous in the land,’ Old Pers. Bh. 1. 34 drauga dahyauvā vasiy abava ‘the Lie became rife in the land’; Bh. 100 parsu dina ‘they are lies,’ Old Pers. Bh. 4. 49–50 duuwa’at maniyatiy ‘consider it falsified.’ The New Susian, like the Old Persian, has the word for ‘lie,’ titkim(m)e, in the singular throughout. The use of the plural parsu μέ ‘lies’ in the Babylonian version is so much weaker than the singular ‘lie’ in Old Persian and New Susian (drauga, titkim(m)e) that the usage would seem to bespeak personification among the Persians but not among the Babylonians.

The Old Persian phrase hadā viđaibiš bagaibiš (Dar. Pers. d. 14, 22, 24) is one of much importance in the consideration of the religion of the Achaemenidae. Scholars have, almost without exception, rendered these words ‘with the clan-gods’ (Lassen, ZKM. vi. 28–30; Rawlinson, JRA S. O. S. x. 278; Spiegel, Av. übers. ii. 214, Keilinschr. 49; Weisbach-Bang, Keilinschr. 35; Windischmann, ZOR. Stud. 123; C. de Harlez, Av. trad. Introd. 10; Casartelli, Religion des rois Achéménides 8, reprint from CR. du 3e Cong. Scient. des Catholiques; Justi, Grundr. der iran. Philol. ii. 427, Anm. 2; Foy, KZ. xxxiii. 431; cf. also Jackson, Grundr. der iran. Philol. ii. 632). There are, however, grave objections to this rendering. It is true that Dar. Pers. d., where alone the phrase hadā viđaibiš bagaibiš is found, exists only in Old Persian, but two inscriptions in Babylonian and New Susian, Dar. Pers. g. and f. (old signatures of both were H., but see Weisbach, Grundr. der iran. Philol. ii. 64) are very similar. From these two inscriptions we gain what seems to me to be the solution of the Old Persian phrase hadā viđaibiš bagaibiš. The Babylonian inscription Dar. Pers. g. 24 contains the phrase itti ilâni gabbî ‘with all the gods’ (so also Xerx. Pers. ca. 11. 13; eb. 20–21. 25, where the Old Persian and the New Susian texts read only ‘with the gods’ hadā bagaibiš, “nappi-pe-itaka, cf. also Xerx. Pers. da. 18, b. 28). The New Susian rendering Dar. Pers. f. 13–14, 20– 21, the only places where the phrase is found in this version, by 'with all the gods' "nap marpepta-itaka," is another confirmation of my view that the Old Persian višaibīš is not to be derived from viša 'belonging to the clan' but from vispa>viesa>viba 'all,' and the old reading višaibīš is consequently to be rejected in favor of višaibīš.¹

Justi, Grundr. der Iran. Philol. ii, 427, Anm. 2, opposes the view which is here taken with regard to the meaning of višaibīš 'denn-višam (den Stamm) wird von visam (alles) deutlich unterschieden.' At the same time it seems that the Babylonian and New Susian texts just cited, although they are, as Justi very rightly observes, not translations of the Old Persian, intimate very clearly that the Old Persian phrase hadā višaibīš bagaibīš is to be rendered 'with all the gods' rather than 'with the clan-gods' (similarly also Darmesteter, Le Zend-Avesta ii. 365, iii. Introd. p. 65; Bartholomae, Grundr. der Iran. Philol. i. 226, § 404, IF. viii. 251–252). I depart with diffidence from Justi's interpretation of āyadanā (above p. 180) and of hadā višaibīš bagaibīš. It is not seemly for tyros to set aside lightly the decisions of veterans. My interpretation here suggested I regard as tentative and based merely on my best judgment at the present time.

The passage Dar. Pers. g. 1 may also be quoted in this connection. Here it is said that 'great is Ormazd, who is the greatest above all gods' (ina muḫḫi ʾilāni gabbī).²

A Greek inscription of Darius which was found in 1886 at Deirmenjik (see G. Cousin and G. Deschamps, Bull. de corr. hell. xiii. 529 ff.) is of importance in the discussion of the creed of the Achaemenidae. The portion of the inscription which is concerned with religion is as follows (ll. 17-28): ὅτι δὲ τὴν ἑπετὸν θεῶν μοι διάθεσιν ἰδοὺς δόσω σοι μὴ μεταβαλμένην πεῖραν ἡδικημένον θυμοῦ φιλοσοφοῦν γὰρ ιερῶν Ἀτάρλανον φόρον ἐπρασσε καὶ χώραν σκανκανέων βιβλίων ἐπέταττες, δροῦν ιμῶν προγόνων εἰς τὸν θεὸν νοῦν, ὡς Πέρσαι ἐκεῖ. . . . . In these words Darius distinctly informs Gadates, for whom his message is intended, that his own belief is the same as that of his fathers, whereas Gadates has been attempting to efface all traces of the king's attitude toward the gods. This inscription of Deirmenjik is almost polytheistic in tone. The mention of the gods (θεῶ), and the cordial sympathy for the religious views of his non-Zoroastrian ancestors, which Darius clearly felt, if this inscription of his may be believed, are very significant. It is indeed possible to suppose that the θεῶ are the Amshaspands (cf. Plutarch, de Is. et Os. 47) or possibly the angels (Av. yuṣata), a hypothesis which is not without plausibility. Or again it may be suggested that Darius, even though a Zoroastrian, adopted temporarily polytheistic phraseology on account of the religion of the Greek Gadates. A third hypothesis might be offered that Darius held this particular shrine in honor on account of an oracle which Apollo had given the Persians in times long past (l. 28). On the whole, however, the Deirmenjik inscription conveys to me the general impression that Darius was not a Zoroastrian. This conclusion is sustained, in my judgment, by the Egyptian inscriptions of this monarch, which are next to be considered for their bearing on the problem under discussion.

¹ My former view on viša, AJP. xxi. 3, cf. also 9, I now regard as incorrect. Cf. also Foy, KZ. xxxv. 67.

² The view of Oppert, Le peuple... des Médes, pp. 155, 186, that the short and difficult inscription Bh. i, which is found only in New Susian, contains an illusion to the Avesta and its commentaries, to the prayers, and to the translations of these sacred texts into other languages, has been discussed above, p. 172 ff. The translation of this inscription by Jensen, Zeitschr. für Assyriol. vi. 181 ff., is worth citing in this connection. He renders as follows: 'Der König Darius spricht: Unter dem Schutze(?) Ahuramazda's machte ich Inschriften in anderer Weise(?), auf arisch(?), welche vormals nicht waren, und nach den Schriftzeichen [Tabellen] und nach einer "Lehrtafel" machte ich sowohl hiš als auchippi [decrees] und sie wurden geschrieben und mir vorgelesen. Darauf sandte ich selbige Schriften in alle Länder und die Leute (folgten ?? gehorchten ?? cf. sap = nachdem??).'

The inscription of Darius found near Tell el-Maskhutah in Egypt seems to represent the king as a worshipper of the deities of the land. In a spirit quite like that shown by Cyrus at Babylon and by Cambyses in Egypt, the same Darius who, as we have

1 The allusion to the gardeners sacred to Apollo, who were obliged by Gadates to tend unhallowed ground and to pay taxes, is not clear to me. Cousin and Deschamps compare Pausanias viii. 46, 8 (loc. cit. p. 532, n. 3, and cf. Kleuker, Anhang zum Zend-Avesta 2 Bd., 3. Theil, 69) to explain the reverence for Apollo. The god is, they suggest (p. 540), to be identified with the Fire (Av. ātaš, but see Rapp, ZDMG. xix. 78, according to whom Ātaš was identified with Hestia rather than Apollo; and see Darmesteter, Le Zend-Avesta ii. 441, who regards Mithra as the Iranian equivalent of Apollo). The φιλοσοφοῦν ιερῶν Ἀτάρλανος may possibly have been the priests connected with the fire-temples. See further on this inscription Stave, Einfuss des Parsismus auf das Judentum, pp. 55-57.
seen, restored the ‘houses of the gods’ (bītātī ša itānī Bh. 25) uses religious phraseology on the stele of Tell el-Maskhutah which is far from Zoroastrian. The portion of the inscription which concerns us at present is as follows (ll. 1–5, see the translation by Golénischeff, Rec. de trav. xiii. 106–107): ‘(Darius) born of Neit, the lady of Neit, the lady of Sais, image of the god Ra who hath put him on his throne to accomplish what he hath begun. ... (master) of all the sphere of the solar disc [i.e. of the sphere traversed by the solar disc]. When he [Darius] was in the womb [of his mother], and had not yet appeared upon earth, she [the goddess Neit] recognized him as her son, and granted to him ... she hath (extended) her arm to him with the bow before her to overthrow forever his enemies, as she had done for her own son, the god Ra. He is strong ... (he hath destroyed) his enemies in all lands, king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Darius who lives forever, the great, the prince of princes, the ... (the son) of Hystaspes, the Achaemenian, the mighty. He is her son [of the goddess Neit], powerful and wise to enlarge his boundaries.’

In line 5 of the stele of Darius at Chaluf there is an allusion to ‘an adoration made to God by his seers [of Darius].’ Daressy in his discussion of this passage, Rec. de trav. xi. 170, thinks that these ‘seers’ were Magians, ‘for the Egyptian religion had no priests with this name.’ I do not feel qualified to decide upon this point. The impression which I gain from the Egyptian inscriptions combined with his Greek message to Gadates and added to the hints which seem to exist in his Babylonian and New Susian text is far less flattering to the monarch’s religious zeal than to his political shrewdness. I regret to say that, to the best of my judgment, the lofty creed held by Darius in the opinion of many great scholars does not find a confirmation in his non-Iranian Inscriptions.

A conclusion as to the religion of the Achaemenians drawn solely from a study of their non-Iranian Inscriptions seems hardly favorable to the view that these monarchs were Zoroastrians. But an exact decision cannot be reached from such texts alone. Only by a synthesis of all data on this mooted problem can we hope even to approximate the truth.
An Androgynous Babylonian Divinity.—By George A. Barton, Professor in Bryn Mawr College, Bryn Mawr, Penna.

In 1894 I had the honor to call the attention of the Oriental Society to a Sebaean inscription previously published by the Derenbourgs, which registers the metamorphosis of the goddess Ahttar in South Arabia into a god.1 The Sebaean inscriptions since published in fasciculi 2 and 3 of the Corpus make it clear that the goddess Ahttar was not so much transformed in the process, as divided into a masculine and feminine deity, the name Ahttar or some epithet like Tālāb Riyām or Ilmaqqahu being retained for the masculine portion, while the feminine portion went by the name of Shamsu, and both were considered the parents of their worshippers.2

An old Babylonian inscription published by the British Museum in 1898 in Part III of the Cuneiform Texts (plate I, No. 12155) gives us evidence that a similar process of development took place in this goddess among the Semites of Babylonia. The inscription has been translated by Thureau Dangin3 and by Radau,4 but in my judgment both have failed to catch the point wherein the inscription is significant for the history of the religion. It runs:

\text{Dingir Lugal-Ra Kur Kur}
\[
\text{dingir Nana}
\[
\text{NIN dingir Nana-Ra}
\[
\text{Lugal-Tar-Si}
\[
\text{Lugal Kish}
\[
\text{Gir Kisal}
\[
\text{MU-Na-Ru.}

4 Early Babylonian History, p. 135, n. 3.
Thureau Dangin translates: "En l’honneur du dieu roi des contrées et de Ishtar, de la dame Ishtar, Lugal-tar-si, roi de Kish, le mur de la terrasse (?) a construit." Radau would render: "To the god of countries and of Ishtar, mistress of the divine Inanna," etc. The French savant has evidently found the names of deities in the first line awkward, while the American scholar, following other parallels afforded by this French master, seems to me to dispose of the matter in a somewhat violent manner. I would translate as follows:

"For the king of countries,
the god Ishtar;
for the lady, the goddess Ishtar, Lugal-tar-si,
king of Kish,
the structure of a terrace has made."

The kings of Kish were evidently Semitic as the inscriptions published by Hilprecht, who first discovered them, show. Since

1 Thureau Dangin reads in l. 6 BAD KISAL, where I have read GIR KISAL. The sign does not perfectly represent either one. Cf. Thureau Dangin’s Recherches sur l’origine l’Écriture cunéiforme, Nos. 364 and 367.

2 Radau bases this rendering on two passages of Thureau Dangin’s translation of Galet A of Eannadu in the Revue Semitique, Vol. V, p. 67 ff. In the passage to which Radau really refers, Col. II. l. 5, the French scholar translates the sign for Ishtar, (cf. the text in Revue d’assyriologie, pl. I) by “Inanna” largely because he was unable farther down (Col. V. 26), to render it otherwise (cf. loc. cit. n. 1). In reality Inanna is to Dangin only another name of Nana. Nana and Ninkharsag were, as Professor Davis has pointed out (PAOS, 1895, p. cxxv.), the same goddess under different names. The passage in question in Col. II of Eannadu’s Galet is proof of it and should be rendered: 1. 3 “nourished by the life-giving milk (1. 3) of Ninkharsag (1. 4) given a name (1. 5) by Ishtar.” So also in Col. V, l. 26, the passage which suggested the rendering of Thureau Dangin I not only see no reason for reading Inanna, especially if with Radau we treat Inanna as a temple, but would read as follows: (Col. V, l. 23) “To Eanadu, (24) Patesi (25) of Shirpurla (26) by Ishtar, the mother (cf. Recherches No. 404), (Col. VI, l. 1) whom he loves, (2) with the pateship (3) of Shirpurla (4) the kingship of Kish (5) was given.” These parallels therefore fail to convince one that these scholars are right.

3 OBI. Nos. 5–10. Winckler (Orientalische Forschungen, II. 144), and Hilprecht (OBI. Pt. II, p. 56), doubt whether Kish was a real city. These doubts are now rendered unnecessary. In the inscriptions of the kings of other cities, the name Kish always has the determinative for place. Cf. Radau, Early Babylonian History, p. 136.
the sign employed in the inscription of Lugaltarsi to express the name of the deity is the well known sign explained in a syllabary as "Ishtar," we are no doubt right in translating it Ishtar.

Strange as such a combination of masculine and feminine qualities may seem in a deity, there are other traces of their union in one deity in ancient Babylonia. In the incantation published in IV R. 1, there occur in Col. II, ll. 25–28 the expressions: AMA A-A dingir EN-LIL and AMA A-A dingir NIN-LIL, which are translated in the Semitic lines by a-bi um-mi ša ištu En-lil, and a-bi um-mi ša ištu Nin-lil. The Sumerian evidently means "the mother-father En-lil," and "the mother-father Nin-lil," while the Semitic has turned this about and renders "the father-mother who is Enlil," and "the father-mother who is Nin-lil." Delitzsch remarks of this expression (Wörterbuch, p. 20), "d. h. den Namen des Bel und der Beltis, des Elternpaares Belts." The point of the expression, however, is not that they are referred to as a pair of parents but that the qualities of both father and mother are attributed to both. In the light of the treatment of Ishtar in the inscription of Lugaltarsi this fact clearly points to a similar origin for Enlil and Ninlil. There must have been a time when masculine and feminine qualities were attached in popular conception to this deity while as yet its name had not been differentiated, just as they were attached to Ishtar in the time of Lugaltarsi.

There are two phenomena in connection with the Phoenician pantheon which suggest a similar development there. An Ashtart of Sidon is called "Ashtart of the name of Baal" as though there were a time when both were represented by the same name (see CIS. 3*), and Tanith of North Africa is constantly called in the inscriptions "Tanith of the face of Baal" as though there had been a time when they ascribed both masculine and feminine characteristics to their deity, and from that time there had survived an idol of a goddess with a bearded face. (See CIS. 195, and passim.)

1 II R. 59, 12e, f. Cf. Brünnow's List, No. 3051.

2 Abi-ummi in the sense of maternal grandfather, (Strassmaier's Cyrus, No. 277, l. 4), has of course a different origin.
The Genesis of the God Eshmun.—By GEORGE A. BARTON, Professor in Bryn Mawr College, Bryn Mawr, Penna.

It has long been recognized that the god Eshmun is related to the god Adonis or Tammuz. Baethgen’s statement that Tammuz was to the inhabitants of Palestine a foreign word as much as the Egyptian Osiris seems also to be borne out by the facts.
The name Tammuz occurs only in Ezekiel 8:14, and is, since Ezekiel wrote from Babylonia, Dumuzu, a variant form of the Babylonian Duzu. The thesis of this paper is that Eshmun is the Phoenician name of Tammuz, or the Phoenician god corresponding to Duzu, so that Eshmun and Adonis are one.

This view seems to be justified by the following considerations:
1. As has been pointed out elsewhere the old Semitic mother goddess and Tammuz are deities which in some form go back to primitive Semitic times, and it is to be expected that as the Semites scattered, different epithets would be attached to the same deity in different places. 2. It is recognized by all scholars that the equivalent of this deity existed in Palestine and Phoenicia.
The testimony of Ezekiel, Lucian and others leaves no room for doubt on this point. 3. In extant inscriptions neither Tammuz nor Adonis occur, so far as I can find, as proper names. Adon occurs frequently, but always as an epithet of some god, Baal, Hamman, Eshmun, etc. 4. In contrast with this fact, is the fact that the name of Eshmun is of frequent occurrence in the inscriptions. Eshmun is as popular as one would expect Tammuz to be.
5. Eshmun was a god of the healing art, identified with the Greek Aesculapius (CIS. 143). Several scholars identify him with the Iolaos who in a Semitic myth in Greek dress saved the life of Hercules. Similar characteristics pertained to Tammuz, since the bringing back of the dead to life is but a heightened form of healing the sick. 6. In the development of the Semitic religion Astarte in course of time became associated with Baal, the two usually forming a pair. From the close relation which existed in early times between Tammuz and Ashtart one would naturally expect that if Tammuz survived at all, he would be closely associated with this pair. This, however, is just the position which is held by Eshmun in all the principal seats of Phoenician worship. At Carthage, Tanith, the equivalent of Ashtart, and Baal were worshipped in his temple (CIS 252), while Hannibal, in ratifying the treaty with Philip of Macedon, swore by Hercules (Baal), and Iolaos (Eshmun), (Polybius, vii, 9, 2). Once CIS 245 he is made into a compound deity with Ashtart, or at least united with her.¹ At Sidon his worship was very popular and took rank with that of Baal and Ashtart (CIS 3). We learn from Philo of Biblos,² that at Tyre, Ashtarte, Zeus Demeter (Baal) and Adodos (i.e. some god called Adon, probably Eshmun), were the chief deities. At Kition and Idalion in Cyprus, where there were important temples of Ashtart, the worship of Eshmun flourished, as the many proper names from there into which he enters show. He is also in several inscriptions called Melqart, or “king of the city,” a title given to Baal at Tyre. Indeed, it is probable that this indicates a conscious union of Eshmun and Melqart, and is another evidence of the close kinship for which we are contending. 7. With Eshmun as Aesculapius, there are associated two versions of a myth of his death and resurrection which are familiar to all classical scholars in two or more forms. This myth is probably a variant version of that which Lucian tells of Adonis at Gebal (Byblos).³ This is another link of evidence for their identity. 8. Adonis or Adon is only an epithet, not a name. It is an epithet often applied to Eshmun as the name Eshmun-Adon, which was quite common, shows. If Baethgen is right, as I believe he is, in the view that the name Tammuz was unknown in Palestine and Phoenicia, it is clear that there must have been some other name for the god than Adon, an epithet which was applied indiscriminately to all the gods. I think, therefore, that the conclusion that this name was Eshmun is justified.

² See Orelli’s Sanchoniathontis Fragmenta, p. 30.
³ See Lucian’s De Syria Dea, §§ 8-9.
What the name Eshmun means and how it originated, it is hard to say. It was probably originally some kind of an epithet. Of the suggestions made, the one most worthy of credence is probably that of Lagarde (Gr. Uebers. der Prov., p. 81), repeated by W. R. Smith (Rel. of Sem., 2 ed., 469), viz.: that the name is to be connected with the Arabic سِقَانِي, "quail," because in the myth Iolaos brought Heracles to life by giving him a quail to smell of.
EDITORIAL NOTE.

The present volume, xx1, second half, precedes in time of appearing the first half, which has been delayed. The latter is a complete Index to all the previous volumes. It has a separate pagination and will be issued as soon as possible. Unavoidable obstacles have prevented its earlier appearance and it seemed undesirable to keep back the second half till the first should appear.

In the matter of Avestan transcription the editor on the Aryan side was confronted with the following problem. The articles in this volume by Prof. Mills and Dr. Gray, respectively, belong each to a series of articles by the same authors published partly in this Journal and partly elsewhere in different systems of transcription. It seemed unjust to compel either writer to change completely his previous system, especially as the Journal has hitherto adopted no one system. For this reason, although at the expense of uniformity, the two articles have been published in accordance with the systems of transcription employed in previous articles by the same writers. But it is obviously inadvisable to follow such a course in future, and as Prof. Mills' series of articles has now come to an end, while at the same time the system approved by the Grundriss der iranischen Philologie generally obtains, this latter system has been adopted for the Journal and contributors of future articles are requested to conform to it. PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

AMERICAN ORIENTAL SOCIETY,

MEETING IN PHILADELPHIA, PENNA., 1900.

The annual meeting of the Society was held in Philadelphia, Pa., on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of Easter week, April 19th, 20th, and 21st, in the Widener lecture room of the Free Museum of Science and Art, University of Pennsylvania. The following members were in attendance at one or more of the sessions:

Abbott                      Driscoll                      Johnston                      Sanders
Adler                       Ewing                        Lannman                      Schuyler
Atkinson                    Foote                        Lilley                        Scott
Barton                      Ginzberg                     Lyman                        St. Clair, Jr.

Dippell                     Jastrow, M., Jr.               Sailer

The first session of the Society took place on Thursday noon. In the absence of its President it was called to order at 12:15 by the first Vice-President, Dr. W. Hayes Ward.

The minutes of the last annual meeting, held in Cambridge, Mass., April 6th and 7th, 1899, were sent by the Recording Secretary, Professor Moore, through Professor Torrey. On motion of Professor Hopkins their reading was dispensed with.

Professor Jastrow presented the report of the local Committee of Arrangements in the form of a printed program. An invitation was extended by the members of the Oriental Club of Philadelphia to lunch with them on Thursday at one o'clock at the Faculty Club. The Faculty Club and the University Club kindly extended the courtesies of their respective Clubs to the members of the Society. These invitations were accepted with the thanks of the Society.

On motion of Professor Lanman, Professor Oertel was elected to act as Recording Secretary during the sessions.

The following persons, recommended by the Directors, were duly elected (for convenience, the names of those who were elected at later sessions are here included):

CORPORATE MEMBERS.

Rev. Dr. Justin E. Abbott, Bombay, India.
Mr. Frank R. Blake, Baltimore, Md.
Mr. Israel Davidson, New York, N. Y.
Mr. Alfred L. P. Dennis, New York, N. Y.
Mr. J. T. Dennis, Baltimore, Md.
Rev. John C. Ferguson, Shanghai, China.
Rev. Theodore Clinton Foote, Baltimore, Md.
Dr. Louis H. Ginzberg, New York, N. Y.
Prof. E. D. Goodwin, Washington, D. C.
Prof. Richard Henebry, Washington, D. C.
Mr. Robert E. Hume, New Haven, Conn.
Miss Mary Jeffers, Bryn Mawr, Pa.
Prof. Charles S. Leavenworth, Shanghai, China.
Dr. Berthold Laufer, Cologne, Germany.
Dr. Charles Ray Palmer, New Haven, Conn.
Mr. Ernest C. Richardson, Princeton, N. J.
Miss Catharine B. Runkle, Cambridge, Mass.
Mr. W. W. Spence, Jr., Baltimore, Md.
Mr. H. H. St. Clair, Jr., Nyack-on-Hudson, N. Y.
Mr. Nathan Stern, New York, N. Y.
Mr. Joseph T. Stickney, Paris, France.
Mr. Anson Phelps Stokes, Jr., New Haven, Conn.
Mr. W. W. Wood, Baltimore, Md.
Dr. James H. Woods, Boston, Mass. [Total, 28.]

MEMBERS OF THE SECTION FOR THE HISTORICAL STUDY OF RELIGIONS.

Rev. Dr. Felix Adler, New York, N. Y.
Prof. W. J. Beecher, Auburn, N. Y.
Prof. F. H. Giddings, New York, N. Y.
Prof. H. G. Mitchell, Boston, Mass.
Mr. F. N. Robinson, Cambridge, Mass.
Miss F. S. Rogers, Washington, D. C. [Total, 6.]

The Corresponding Secretary, Professor Hopkins, in reporting the correspondence of the year called special attention to communications from Dr. Grierson and Dr. Stein, reading parts of letters received from each in regard to the philological and antiquarian researches made by these two scholars respectively. Other communications from various scholars were also presented. Professor Bloomfield called the Society's attention to the fact that the position heretofore held by Dr. Stein is now filled by a member of the Society, Dr. A. W. Stratton, formerly of Chicago University.

The Treasurer, Mr. F. W. Williams, presented the following report:

The Treasurer has the honor to present the following account of the receipts and disbursements of the Society during the calendar year 1899 together with a statement of its invested funds. As will be seen from this account the gross receipts during the year amounted to $1,667.00, or, excluding two exceptional items, a life-membership fee and a sum collected by Professor Lanman for the Society's contribution toward the "Orientalische Bibliographie," to $1,487.09. This total is made up from $1,057.00 annual dues received from corporate members, $250.19 from sales of publications and $159.90 from interest on invested funds exclusive of the Bradley Type Fund. Of these items the first is smaller by $124 than that of last year—indicating an increased reluctance on the part of members to pay their assessments rather than a decrease in membership,—but in the increased sales of the Journal ($350.19 against $137.07) and by the normal increment of compound interest ($159.90 against $136.58) this difference is more than made good. The actual expenditures show a total of $1,267.04, composed of $1,219.88 for printing both parts of Vol. xx of the Journal, and $47.18 for job printing, postage and incidental expenses. This may be taken as about the average cost of carrying on the Society on the basis of its present work, and must not be compared with the $895 disbursements shown in last year's report which comprised the cost of printing only one part of the Society's annual publication.

The Chair appointed Professors Sanders and Oertel to audit this report as well as last year's, which had not yet been audited. Professor Lanman suggested that the money now accumulating in the Bradley Type Fund might possibly be utilized for some purposes other than the purchase of oriental types. This suggestion was referred to the Directors.

Professor Hopkins presented the report of the Librarian, Mr. Van Name:

The additions to the Society's library for the year past have been 57 volumes, 92 parts of volumes and 210 pamphlets, these last being principally dissertations.

The list of donors comprises 39 societies and institutions and 15 individuals.

The most noteworthy single gift is a copy of Lady Meux Manuscript No. I, containing the Lives of Mabô' Seyôn and Gabra Kréstô, the Ethiopic texts edited with an English translation by Dr. E. A. Wallis Budge. This privately printed volume, a thick quarto with ninety-two colored plates and other illustrations, is the third gift of this character which the Society has received from Lady Meux, of Theobald’s Park, Hertfordshire.

The number of titles in the library (dissertations not included) is now 5182; of manuscripts, 188.

Respectfully submitted,

ADDISON VAN NAME, Librarian.

New Haven, April 17, 1900.

On motion of Professor Lanman it was voted to send a vote of thanks to Lady Meux for her gift to the library.

The Editor of the Journal, Professor Moore, reported as follows:

The Second Part of Volume xx, for July to December, 1899, which should have been out in the summer, was issued in January, 1900. The delay was occasioned by the great difficulty I experienced in getting the material for the volume from the contributors. The printing dragged along into a season of the year when the printers are fully occupied with other work and this caused additional delay. The prompt publication of the Journal, which all must desire, is not possible unless the matter for the volume is all in the editor’s hands within a few weeks after the meeting, as was set forth in the Proceedings of the last meeting (p. 366).

I am sorry to say that unforeseen labors and responsibilities have prevented me from completing the promised Index to the Journal. The work has made considerable progress, and I shall make every effort to print it before the close of the year. That it may be possible to do this I must ask to be relieved of the duties of editor.

In making my last report I wish to thank my colleagues on whom I have often had to call for assistance and advice, always promptly and efficiently given; and the contributors to the Journal for their cooperation.

Respectfully submitted,

GEORGE F. MOORE.

The Corresponding Secretary, Professor Hopkins, reported that since its last meeting (but in the first case just before this) the Society had lost by death the following members:

HONORARY MEMBER.

Prof. Daniel G. Brinton, Media, Pa.
Mr. Epes Sargent Dixwell, Cambridge, Mass.
Prof. W. Henry Green, Princeton, Pa.
Dr. E. B. Landis, Chemulpo, Corea.
Prof. Jules Luquiens, New Haven, Conn.

CORRESPONDING MEMBERS.

Rev. S. R. House.
Rev. Dr. S. H. Kellogg.

Professor Jastrow made some remarks upon Professor Daniel G. Brinton, whose work in Amerian philology had been widely recognized. Dr. Ward spoke of Prof. W. H. Green, and the Corresponding Secretary, after speaking of Prof. Luquiens, a former pupil of Prof. Whitney and long a professor in Yale University, alluded to the fact that Dr. Landis had died in Corea the day after he was made a member of the Society (16 April, 1898).

The meeting adjourned at 1.05 p. m.

The Society reassembled at 3.15 o’clock in the afternoon, Dr. Ward presiding.

The Chair appointed the following a committee to nominate officers for the ensuing year: Professors Haupt, Jackson, Sanderson.

On the recommendation of the Directors it was voted to appoint a committee to consider the question of transcription of Semitic alphabets. The Chair appointed Professors Gottheil, Haupt, Hyvernat, and Moore members of this committee.

It was voted to adjourn at 5.30 p. m.

Professor Hopkins announced, for the Directors, that the next regular meeting of the Society would be held in New York City, on April 11th, 12th and 13th, and that the Directors had decided to accept the invitation of the associated philological societies to hold a Second American Congress of Philologists in Philadelphia, December 27–29, 1900.

The following communications were then presented:

Dr. J. E. Abbott, on Conditions in India. (Remarks were made on this by Professors Lanman, Bloomfield, and Hopkins.)

Mr. Blake, the poetic form of Isaiah, chap. xl.

Professor Bloomfield, on the relative chronology of the Vedic hymns. (Remarks were made by Professors Lanman and Collitz.)

Professor Hopkins read a brief communication by Professor Fay on the Prometheus fire legend.

Professor Gottheil described a valuable Koran MS., written in Cufic script, said to have been written by Caliph Ali, but dated somewhere between the eighth and tenth century of our era.

Mr. Gray, Contributions to the syntax of the Avesta.

Dr. Grimm, on the use of יֹּאָה, ’to answer’ in the Old Testament. (Remarks were made by Professor Jastrow.)

Professor Haupt, The Showbread.

Professor Hopkins, Vedic Literature in the Sanskrit Epic.
Professor Jackson, A Sanskrit Story translated from Daṇḍin’s Daṇḍakumārīcarita and the second series of his Time analysis of Sanskrit plays.

On motion of Professor Jastrow it was voted to meet at 10 o’clock on Friday morning.

The Society adjourned at 5.45.

The third session was held on Friday morning at 10.20. The reading of papers was resumed as follows:

Dr. Johnston, A letter of Śamaś-śum-ukin to his brother Sardanapalas.

Professor Barton, The story of Aḥikar and the Book of Daniel. (Remarks by Professor J. R. Harris.)

Professor Price, Notes on the pantheon of the Gudean cylinders. (Remarks by Professor Jastrow and Dr. Ward.)

Dr. P. Carus, Coincidences, Significant passages of Chinese, Indian, and Greek Sages. (Remarks by Mr. Lilley.)

Professor Lamman, On the name of Buddha’s birthplace (Remarks by Professor Hopkins) and Talking birds in ancient India. (Remarks by Professor Jackson and Messrs. Abbott and Schuyler.)

Professor Haupt then spoke on Philippine problems. After the reading of this communication Professor Haupt proposed the formation by the Society of a special section devoted to Colonial studies with especial reference to the Oriental possessions lately come under the jurisdiction of the United States. On motion of Professor Jastrow this proposal was referred to the Directors for report before the close of the meeting.

Mention having been made by Professor Haupt of the excellent efforts of the Smithsonian Institute in the line of Oriental research, Dr. Cyrus Adler briefly surveyed the scientific work done by Government touching the new territories. Dr. Adler then introduced the following resolution:

The American Oriental Society respectfully urges upon Congress the importance of the extension of the work of the Bureau of American Ethnology, under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution, to the Philippine Islands for the study of the languages and customs of the native populations, and the issuing of simple vocabularies and works which will be of use to officers of the Army, Navy and Civil Service whose duties will call them to those islands.

On motion of Professor Gottheil this was also referred to the Directors for report before the meeting adjourned.

Mr. Michelson then presented the following three communications: The Indo-European tenues Aspiratae in Greek; The genitive in -aya in Old Persian; and a Note on NR.a. 52. (Remarks were made by Professor Jackson.)
Professor Oertel spoke on the phonetic character of Sanskrit A.
(Remarks by Professor Lanman and Mr. Michelson.)
President Ramsay presented a study of the second Psalm.
The meeting adjourned at 12.45.
The afternoon session began at 3.15, Dr. Ward being in the chair.

The Directors reported the election of Professors Hopkins and Torrey to serve as editors of the Journal for the ensuing year.

The following papers were read:
Mr. Blake, Babylonian rites and the Atharva Veda.
Mr. Schuyler announced an Index verborum to the fragments of the Avesta. (Remarks by Professors Hopkins and Jackson.)
Dr. Talcott Williams, Islam in Morocco. (Remarks by Professor Hopkins.)
Professor Gottheil, The Mohammedans in the Philippines.
Rev. Mr. Ewing, Some phases of non-Christian religious activity in the Punjab. (Remarks by Professor Bloomfield and Dr. Abbott.)
Professor Haupt, The inspection of the intestines in the Jewish ritual. (Remarks by Professor Jastrow.)
Professor Hopkins, Atheism versus Theism in Ancient India. (Remarks by Professor Lanman and Mr. Ewing.)
Professor Jackson, The Religion of the Achaemenian Kings. (Remarks by Professor Hopkins and Dr. Ward.)
Professor Jastrow spoke on the first International Congress for the historical study of religions to be held in Paris.
A paper by Mr. A. H. Allen, The Banyan Sāvitrī rite as given in the Vṛtārka and by Hemāndri, was presented by Professor Lanman.

Dr. Ward spoke on the Hittite Question.
Rev. Mr. Foote on 2 Samuel, 6.
The Society adjourned at 6 o'clock.

The last session of the Society was called to order at 9.45 on Saturday morning by Professor Lanman, one of its Vice-Presidents.

The Committee to nominate officers recommended reelection of the old board of officers and by unanimous consent the ballot of the Society was cast for the following officers for the ensuing year:

President—President Daniel Coit Gilman, of Baltimore.
Vice-Presidents—Dr. William Hayes Ward, of New York; Professor Crawford H. Toy, of Cambridge; Professor Charles R. Lanman, of Cambridge.
Corresponding Secretary—Professor Washburn Hopkins, of New Haven.
Recording Secretary—Professor George F. Moore, of Andover.
Secretary of the Section for Religions—Professor Morris Jastrow, Jr., of Philadelphia.
Treasurer—Professor Frederick Wells Williams, of New Haven.
Librarian—Mr. Addison Van Name, of New Haven.
Directors—The officers above named: and President William R. Harper, of Chicago; Professors Richard Gottheil, A. V. Williams Jackson, and Francis Brown, of New York; Professors Maurice Bloomfield and Paul Haupt, of Baltimore; Professor Henry Hyvernat, of Washington.

Action on Professor Haupt’s Recommendation of the creation of a special section for colonial studies was, on motion of Professor Gottheil, deferred till the next regular meeting.

Professor Lanman announced that the Directors had voted to continue the subvention to the Oriental Bibliography (see Journal xx, 2d half, p. 369).

A vote of thanks to Professor Moore for his faithful editorial services in behalf of the Society was unanimously adopted.

Professor Lanman made an announcement in regard to Professor Hoernle’s Weber MS. and invited subscriptions.

Professor Lanman reported that the Directors had unanimously voted to recommend the following resolution for adoption by the Society:

Voted, that the American Oriental Society cordially approves the plans of the International Committee appointed at the last Congress at Paris for the formation of an India Exploration Fund and will be glad to second in any possible way the efforts of the American representative of the Committee to further the work of the Fund by organized action in the United States.

The resolution was unanimously adopted by the Society and the following gentlemen chosen to serve on the Committee: Professor Lanman, President Gilman, Professors White, Hopkins, Jackson, Mr. Rockhill, Professor C. E. Norton, President B. L. Wheeler, Professor Bloomfield, President Harper and Dr. Talcott H. Williams.

The Society adopted by unanimous vote the resolution offered by Dr. C. Adler and recommended by the directors, to be communicated to both houses of Congress.

Professor Lanman spoke briefly on the urgent need of good text-books for the progress of Indian studies, which gave rise to a discussion in which Professors Gottheil, Hopkins, and Jastrow participated.

Mr. Remy spoke on the influence of Persian literature on the German poet Platen. (Remarks by Professors Hopkins and Lanman.)

Professor Torrey presented a brief abstract of his two papers: “M’harršă and M’hôrâš” again, and the old Syriac (Lewis Palimpsest) reading in Matthew 14, 26; Mark 6, 49. (Remarks by Professors Harris and Hyvernat.)

Rev. Mr. Ginzberg discussed, in German, Greek Loan-words in Aramaic. (Remarks by Professors Gottheil and Lanman.)
Professor Bloomfield discussed Ṛcīśama, an epithet of India.
The papers entitled as below under the names of Professor Haupt (No. 20), Rev. Mr. Kohut (Nos. 29–31), and Prof. Prince (Nos. 40–41) were read by title only.
The following vote of thanks was unanimously adopted:

The American Oriental Society desires to express its sincere thanks to the Board of Managers of the Free Museum of Sciences and Art for the use of their rooms; to the Oriental Club of Philadelphia for their generous hospitality; to the Faculty Club, University Club, and Acorn Club for courtesies extended to the Society; and to the Committee of Arrangements for their efficient services.

The meeting adjourned at 11 o'clock to meet in Philadelphia, December 27, 1900. The proceedings at this meeting are given below.

The following is a list of the papers presented to the Society:

PROCEEDINGS
AMERICAN ORIENTAL SOCIETY,
MEETING IN PHILADELPHIA, PENNA.,
December 27th, 28th, and 29th, 1900.

The Society met in Philadelphia, Penna., in connection with the Congress of Philological and Archaeological Societies, which was held at the University of Pennsylvania in that city on December 27th, 28th, and 29th, 1900. The following societies participated in the Congress:

AMERICAN ORIENTAL SOCIETY (1849).
AMERICAN PHILOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION (1869).
SPELLING REFORM ASSOCIATION (1878).
ARCHAEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE OF AMERICA (1879).
SOCIETY OF BIBLICAL LITERATURE AND EXEGESIS (1890).
MODERN LANGUAGE ASSOCIATION (1888).
AMERICAN DIALECT SOCIETY (1889).

A joint meeting of these Societies was held on Thursday afternoon, December 27th, at half-past two o'clock, in the College Chapel. An address of welcome was made by Provost C. C. Harrison, of the University of Pennsylvania, and responded to, on behalf of the Societies, by President D. C. Gilman, of Johns Hopkins University. President W. A. P. Martin, of the Imperial University, Pekin, China, spoke briefly on Chinese Diplomacy. The rest of the session was given to the reading of papers by members of the different societies, as follows:

Professor G. F. Moore, Andover Theological Seminary. Some Oriental sources of the Alexander romance.
President B. I. Wheeler, University of California. What is the cause of phonetic uniformity?
Professor J. R. S. Sterrett, Amherst College. A ruined Seljuk Khan compared with Anatolian Khans of to-day.
Professor F. A. March, Lafayette College. A survey of the growth of modern language work in America.
Professor George Hempl, University of Michigan. Calling to cows.
Professor Paul Haupt, Johns Hopkins University. Some Oriental princesses at the Egyptian court of the 18th dynasty.
Professor Brander Matthews, Columbia University. The importance of the folk-theatre.
Professor Allan Marquand, Princeton University. The Morgan collection of gold objects recently presented to the Metropolitan Museum.

On Thursday evening, at eight o’clock, in the same place, the address before the affiliated Societies was delivered by Professor B. L. Gildersleeve, of Johns Hopkins University, on Oscillations and Nutations in Philology.

The sessions of the American Oriental Society were held on Thursday and Friday mornings, Dec. 27th and 28th, in the Law School of the University of Pennsylvania.

The following members of the Society were in attendance:

Arnold, W. R.  Gottheil  Kent  Robinson
Barton  Gray  Levy  Rogers
Blomgren  Grimm  Lilley  Ropes
Casanowicz  Haupt  Martin, W. A. P.  Rudolph, Miss Dippell  Hopkins  Moore  Scott
Driscoll  Hyvernart  Oertel  Steele
Fenollosa  Jackson  Palon  Ward, W. H.
Gilman  Jastrrow  Peters  Winlow

The meeting on Thursday morning was called to order at 10 o’clock by Dr. Williams Hayes Ward, Vice-President of the Society. Professor Oertel was chosen Recording Secretary pro tem. The Society then adjourned till 11 o’clock, that the members might have opportunity to hear the annual address of the President of the Society of Biblical Literature, by Dr. John P. Peters, on the Religion of Moses.

At 11 o’clock the Society resumed its session with President D. C. Gilman in the chair. The President introduced President William A. P. Martin of Peking, a corresponding member of the Society. The death, on Christmas day, of the Right Rev. Charles R. Hale, Bishop of Cairo, Illinois, was reported. Bishop Hale was one of the oldest members of the Society; while a student in the University of Pennsylvania he printed, in conjunction with others, a translation of the Rosetta Stone.

Professor G. A. Barton, of Bryn Mawr College, read a paper on An Androgynous Babylonian divinity. President Martin pointed out a Chinese parallel.

1 This list is doubtless incomplete, because many members of the Society who were in attendance upon the Congress did not register at the meetings of the Society.
Dr. L. H. Gray presented Contributions to the syntax of the Avesta—The Subordinate clause.
Professor Washburn Hopkins read a paper on the Hindu custom of dying to redress a grievance. Remarks on similar customs among the Chinese were made by President Martin and Mr. Lilley.
Professor Hanns Oertel read on the Sanskrit aprīna, 'in-breathing.'
Mr. F. R. Blake, of Johns Hopkins University, read a communication on Intransitive verbs in Assyrian.
The Society adjourned to meet again on Friday morning.
The Society met on Friday morning at 11 o'clock.
Dr. W. C. Winslow read a paper on the Discovery of remains of the First Dynasty in Egypt.
Professor T. F. Wright, on some Jar handles with votive inscriptions from Palestine.
Professor G. L. Robinson, on the Religion of Edom, in the light of the newly discovered high place at Petra.
Rev. T. C. Foote, on Divination by lot in the Old Testament.
Mr. Montgomery Schuyler gave an account of the Modern translations of Çakuntalā.
Professor G. L. Robinson gave the results of his recent investigation of the Wells of Beersheba.
The following communications were presented by title:
Professor G. A. Barton, The Genesis of the god Eshmun.
Professor A. V. W. Jackson, Brief notes on the Sanskrit drama.
Professor Nathaniel Schmidt, Composition and date of Enoch 37–71.
President Warren's paper (mentioned below) was withdrawn.
No business meeting was held at this session, but allusion was made informally to the losses suffered by the Society in the death of its Honorary member, Professor F. Max Müller, and of its Corporate members, Bishop Hale and Professor Everett.
The Corresponding Secretary was instructed to convey the thanks of the Society to the Provost and Trustees of the University of Pennsylvania for their generous hospitality; to the Local Committee for the admirable arrangements made by them for the sessions of the Congress and the several Societies, and for the comfort of the members; and to the Faculty Club for the courtesies extended by them.
The Society adjourned, to meet in New York, April 11, 1901.
As a matter of record the Programme of the Congress is appended.

CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS

OF THE

AMERICAN ORIENTAL SOCIETY.

With Amendments of April 1887.

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I. This Society shall be called the AMERICAN ORIENTAL SOCIETY.

ARTICLE II. The objects contemplated by this Society shall be:—

1. The cultivation of learning in the Asiatic, African, and Polynesian languages, as well as the encouragement of researches of any sort by which the knowledge of the East may be promoted.

2. The cultivation of a taste for oriental studies in this country.

3. The publication of memoirs, translations, vocabularies, and other communications, presented to the Society, which may be valuable with reference to the before-mentioned objects.

4. The collection of a library and cabinet.

ARTICLE III. The members of this Society shall be distinguished as corporate and honorary.

ARTICLE IV. All candidates for membership must be proposed by the Directors, at some stated meeting of the Society, and no person shall be elected a member of either class without receiving the votes of as many as three-fourths of all the members present at the meeting.

ARTICLE V. The government of the Society shall consist of a President, three Vice-Presidents, a Corresponding Secretary, a Recording Secretary, a Secretary of the Section for the Historical Study of Religions, a Treasurer, a Librarian, and seven Directors, who shall be annually elected by ballot, at the annual meeting.

ARTICLE VI. The President and Vice-Presidents shall perform the customary duties of such officers, and shall be ex officio members of the Board of Directors.

ARTICLE VII. The Secretaries, Treasurer, and Librarian shall be ex officio members of the Board of Directors, and shall perform their respective duties under the superintendence of said Board.

ARTICLE VIII. It shall be the duty of the Board of Directors to regulate the financial concerns of the Society, to superintend its publications, to carry into effect the resolutions and orders of the Society, and to exercise a general supervision over its affairs. Five Directors at any regular meeting shall be a quorum for doing business.

ARTICLE IX. An Annual meeting of the Society shall be held during Easter week, the days and place of the meeting to be determined by the Directors, said meeting to be held in Massachusetts at least once in three years. One or more other meetings, at the discretion of the Directors, may also be held each year at such place and time as the Directors shall determine.

ARTICLE X. There shall be a special Section of the Society, devoted to the historical study of religions, to which section others than members of the American Oriental Society may be elected in the same manner as is prescribed in Article IV.

ARTICLE XI. This Constitution may be amended, on a recommendation of the Directors, by a vote of three-fourths of the members present at an annual meeting.

BY-LAWS.

I. The Corresponding Secretary shall conduct the correspondence of the Society, and it shall be his duty to keep, in a book provided for the purpose, a copy of his letters; and he shall notify the meetings in such manner as the President or the Board of Directors shall direct.

II. The Recording Secretary shall keep a record of the proceedings of the Society in a book provided for the purpose.

III. a. The Treasurer shall have charge of the funds of the Society; and his investments, deposits, and payments shall be made under the superintendence of the Board of Directors. At each annual meeting he shall report the state of the finances, with a brief summary of the receipts and payments of the previous year.

III. b. After December 31, 1896, the fiscal year of the Society shall correspond with the calendar year.

III. c. At each annual business meeting in Easter week, the President shall appoint an auditing committee of two men—preferably men residing in or near the town where the Treasurer lives—to examine the Treasurer's accounts and vouchers, and to inspect the evidences of the Society's property, and to see that the funds called for by his balances are in his hands. The Committee shall perform this duty as soon as possible after the New Year's day succeeding their appointment, and shall report their findings to the Society at the next annual business meeting thereafter. If these findings are satisfactory, the Treasurer shall receive his acquaintence by a certificate to that effect, which shall be recorded in the Treasurer's book, and published in the Proceedings.

IV. The Librarian shall keep a catalogue of all books belonging to the Society, with the names of the donors, if they are presented, and shall at each annual meeting make a report of the accessions to the library during the previous year, and shall be farther guided in the discharge of his duties by such rules as the Directors shall prescribe.

V. All papers read before the Society, and all manuscripts deposited by authors for publication, or for other purposes, shall be at the disposal of the Board of Directors, unless notice to the contrary is given to the Editors at the time of presentation.

VI. Each corporate member shall pay into the treasury of the Society an annual assessment of five dollars; but a donation at any one time of seventy-five dollars shall exempt from obligation to make this payment.

VII. Corporate and Honorary members shall be entitled to a copy of all the publications of the Society issued during their membership, and shall also have the privilege of taking a copy of those previously published, so far as the Society can supply them, at half the ordinary selling price.

VIII. If any corporate member shall for two years fail to pay his assessments, his name may, at the discretion of the Directors, be dropped from the list of members of the Society.

IX. Members of the Section for the Historical Study of Religions shall pay into the treasury of the Society an annual assessment of two dollars; and they shall be entitled to a copy of all printed papers which fall within the scope of the Section.

X. Six members shall form a quorum for doing business, and three to adjourn.

SUPPLEMENTARY BY-LAW.

I. FOR THE LIBRARY.

1. The Library shall be accessible for consultation to all members of the Society, at such times as the Library of Yale College, with which it is deposited, shall be open for a similar purpose; further, to such persons as shall receive the permission of the Librarian, or of the Librarian or Assistant Librarian of Yale College.

2. Any member shall be allowed to draw books from the Library upon the following conditions: he shall give his receipt for them to the Librarian, pledging himself to make good any detriment the Library may suffer from their loss or injury, the amount of said detriment to be determined by the Librarian, with the assistance of the President, or of a Vice-President; and he shall return them within a time not exceeding three months from that of their reception, unless by special agreement with the Librarian this term shall be extended.

3. Persons not members may also, on special grounds, and at the discretion of the Librarian, be allowed to take and use the Society's books, upon depositing with the Librarian a sufficient security that they shall be duly returned in good condition, or their loss or damage fully compensated.

3. For information regarding the sale of the Society's publications, see the next foregoing page.

4. Communications for the Journal should be sent to Prof. Washburn Hopkins, 235 Bishop St., New Haven, Ct.

CONCERNING MEMBERSHIP.

It is not necessary for any one to be a professed Orientalist in order to become a member of the Society. All persons—men or women—who are in sympathy with the objects of the Society and willing to further its work are invited to give it their help. This help may be rendered by the payment of the annual assessments, by gifts to its library, or by scientific contributions to its Journal, or in all of these ways. Persons desiring to become members are requested to apply to the Treasurer, whose address is given above. Members receive the Journal free. The annual assessment is $5. The fee for Life-Membership is $75.

Persons interested in the Historical Study of Religions may become members of the Section of the Society organized for this purpose. The annual assessment is $2.; members receive copies of all publications of the Society which fall within the scope of the Section.
